PROLEGOMENA.

MORE than ten years ago, when R. v. Roth suggested to me to supply the place of Westergaard's edition of the Avestâ, already out of print, by a revised edition of the text, I undertook the work after some hesitation, encouraged, however, by the thought that a few years would suffice for the completion of the task. Such was my hope and expectation, but the mass of material which collected, and other circumstances more especially, have long deferred the wished-for completion of the task imposed. With the Vendîdâd, however, the Avestâ proper is at last concluded, and I hasten to finish the work, and with the present Prolegomena to give the clue to the whole.

If I may be allowed in the first place to say a few words regarding the work accomplished by my predecessor N. L. Westergaard, and the edition of the Zendavesta which he brought out in the year 1854, I think I am perhaps better qualified than any one else to pass judgment on this subject; for I have carefully examined anew, and have fully tested, all the means and resources which were at Westergaard's command. I may say at once that he succeeded marvellously in accomplishing that most difficult task, an editio princeps of the Avestâ. So admirably did Westergaard work through the manuscripts that were known to him, and so model the text he provided, that without entirely new manuscript material, there would have remained little or nothing for me to do. A re-reading of the texts extant in Europe, I found, promised but little fruit. It soon became evident, however, that in India there was hidden an unopened store of manuscripts, and I forthwith directed my attention to securing these. Through the kindness of friends I succeeded in procuring the greater number of them, and those the more important; this circumstance has placed me in a position to improve upon Westergaard in details, or in cases where he had already hit upon the right reading—as for the most part he had—to substantiate this by better authority. Taken as a whole, my work has remained, what was intended from the first, an improved reprint of Westergaard. Only the critical apparatus has unfortunately greatly increased in extent and compass.

Especially for the Yasna much new material became accessible to me. In the Yashts, the one ancestral manuscript has placed the text criticism on a firmer basis. In the Vendîdâd, on the contrary, I have not been able to get much beyond Westergaard's material. It is particularly to be regretted that some of the Yasna manuscripts came to hand late; some in fact even after the printing was finished. All the more unfortunate was this, as among the stragglers were some that at the outset were almost indispensable, as regards text criticism, for a proper classification and estimation of the manuscripts.

Before proceeding detailed account, I shall give a sketch, alphabetically arranged for easier survey, of all the manuscripts that have been used for the edition, including also those that came to hand after the printing was finished. The latter are indicated by an asterisk (*).

B(ombay, University Library):

B1, Vendidâd with Pahlavi translation, 439 foll., height 10½ in., breadth 5⅞ in., Devanâgari paging, no date. The Ms., according to a notice by Haug on the inside of the cover, comes from Baroda; but according to Dastur Hoshang Jamasp's correction, it came from Baroach, where it was purchased in the year 1865. The latter statement is substantiated by Haug's Account of a Tour in Gujarat in 1863-64, p. 9. Wanting are foll. 72-73 (Vd. 4,2-5), 129 (5,28-29) and the end; the Ms. breaks off in 21,9 with [illegible]. The beginning, which likewise is wanting as far as 1,6, is supplied by a later hand; the old Ms. commences at 1,7. In the middle of fol. 87a (Vd. 4,38) a second and inferior hand begins, and runs as far as the second line of fol. 110a (Vd. 5,7); the old hand resumes at Par. 4. In this way Parr. 4 (from [illegible]) as far as 7 ([illegible]) are written first by the second hand and then by the old hand. Toward the end of fol. 114a (conclusion of 5,7) once more the second hand begins and continues as far as the second line of fol. 116a (5,9). The Ms. goes back to K1.

B2, Vendidâd sâda, without date, a rather old Ms. of this class, shows much wear and is much patched. 9⅞ : 7⅝ in. The Ms. begins with fol. 19, number of the last leaf is 381. The first 18 leaves are wanting except two (from Vp. 2), which are bound in after fol. 373. Likewise foll. 230 and 232 are wanting, while 231 is bound as the last leaf. Also the last leaves from 369 are several times misplaced in binding and wrongly paged. The conclusion is missing, as the Ms. breaks off in Yasna 68.

B3, Yasna sâda and the two Sirôzas, old, but very carelessly written and worthless, appears to be influenced by K5 or to be a poor excerpt from the Avestâ text of K5. The writing recalls L17, both Mss. are likely from the same scribe. 189 foll., 9½ : 6½ in., often misplaced in binding.

Bb (Mobed Burjorji Bomanji):

Bb1, Vendidâd sâda, 368 foll., 11½ : 8¾ in.; the last leaves supplied by a later hand. The Ms. is better written at the beginning, but quite carelessly further on.

Br (Behmanji Rustamji Mullan Firoz, Dastur in Bombay):

Br1, Vendidâd sâda, 332 foll., the last leaf of the text is wanting. Dated A.Y. 1118, Saṃvat 1805 (A.D. 1748). Carefully written, correct Ms.

Br2, Yasna sâda, modern, undated and unpaged, 13 : 8¼ in., about sixty or seventy years old, imitated Iranian style.

C(ambridge):

C1, Yasna sâda, Collegii Emmanuelis Liber. On the inside of the binding is written: "See Dr. Hyde's Religio V. Persarum f. 530. He calls the Book Yezishny and the Language Zendvista." And on the first page of the manuscript: "This Book is Called Ejessnney written in the Language Jenivista and Containes the Religion of the Ancient Parsyes." The Ms. contains 192 written foll., 12 lines to the page, 5⅞ : 4⅞ in., undated. It breaks off at fol. 192 in the midst of Yasna 50,3a; there follow then eight pages of old paper, but not written upon. The first information we have regarding the codex is given by Hyde, as above. The Ms. was accordingly written before 1700.

D:

Modern copy of the Zamyâd Yasht (19), made for Westergaard from a Ms. of Dhanjibhai Framji which was itself, however, not very correct.

Dh(anjibhai Framji Patel in Bombay):

Dh1, Vendidâd sâda, 324 foll., 10⅜ : 7¼ in. Dated A.Y. 1134 (A.D. 1764). Now in possession of the Indian Museum in Florence.

E(dalji Darabji Rustomji Sanjana, late Dastur):

E1, Khorda Avestâ and Yasht codex. Two volumes comprising 542 foll., consecutively paged, 9½ : 5¾ in. Carefully written Ms. Contents: Avestâ alphabet[1]; the introductory Nirangs; Nyâishes, Patits, Nirangs.—Âfringân 1-3; Yasht 1-21.—Gâhs; Sîrôzas; Bâzes; Âfringân Rapithwin fol. 530b (the latter appended by a second hand).

E2, Khorda Avestâ, modern, very handsomely written copy, 559 pp. and an appendix of 18 pp., $8^1/_8 : 6$ in. Contains many Avestâ fragments.

[1] Such Avestâ alphabets originally stood at the opening of most Khorda Avestâ and Yasht Mss. They have been destroyed, however, in almost all old Mss. and have been supplied sec. m.; consequently they are for the most part palæographically worthless.

F(ramji Fardunji Madan):

F1, Yasht codex, 277 foll., $7^1/_8 : 4^3/_4$ in. Written in Nosari by Âsadîn Kàkâ Danpâl Lakhmidar of the family of Hormazyâr Râmyâr, and finished on the day Din of the month Ardabahisht A.Y. 960, Saṃvat 1648 (= January 21, 1591). The first leaf is wanting; the Ms. begins with fol. 2. The last leaf with the conclusion of the colophon is likewise no longer in existence; a copy of the same by a later hand, and evidently made exactly according to the original, is appended to the Ms. Contents: Alphabet; the introductory Nirangs (prayer formulas); Nyâish 1-5 (foll. 10-32) —Yasht 1-21 (foll. 35-274).—3 foll. Pâzand texts.—This neatly and very correctly written Ms. is the oldest that contains all the Yashts, and as being the ancestral manuscript of most of the Yasht copies it is of great value.

F2, Iranian Khorda Avestâ, very handsomely and carefully written, 97 foll. ($7^3/_4 : 5^1/_2$ in.) Avestà texts for the most part with Pahlavì translation, the remainder a modern Persian text. Written in Yazd by Rûstâm Gushtâsp Ardashîr, and finished on the day Zâmyâd of the month Dînî A. 20. Y. 1075 (A.Y. 1095 = July 21, 1726, or July 26, 1706).[1] The Avestâ texts contain Nyâishes 1 and 3, Hôrmezd Yasht, Âfrîngân Dahmân and Gahanbâr, the lesser Sîrôza (1).

Fl(orence, Indian Museum):

Fl1, Vìspered sâda (containing the Yasna and Vìspered in the form and arrangement of text of the Vendìdâd sàda, but without the Vendìdâd), written in Iranian style, modern, but very correct. Originally in possession of the Dastur Khorshedji Bejanji. 271 written leaves, unpaged, partly written on blue paper, $9^7/_8 : 7^1/_8$ in.

H(oshangji Jamaspji, M. A., Ph. D., Dastur in Poona):

H1, the Ms. consists of three parts which are separately paged: (1) Yasna sàda with Kiriâ, foll. 1-233, paged with Devanâgarî numbers; (2) the lesser and the greater Sîrôza, 11 foll., paged with Arabic figures; (3) Vìspered sàda, 85 foll. No date; very correct old Ms., the best of the Yasna sàda class. $8^1/_4 : 6$ in.

H2, Khorda Avestà with the Sanskrit translation, written in a peculiar character resembling that of J9 and closely akin to that manuscript. 186 foll., $9 : 7^1/_2$ in. The Âçîrvâda contains the number of the year 784 (A. D. 1415). The first leaf is wanting. Contents: Khurshêd Nyâish

[1] According to Albîrûnî, translated by Suchau, pp. 138, 184, a double era was in vogue in his time: the era of the Zoroastrians and the era of Yezdegerd. The former begins with the death of Yezdegerd, A. D. 651; the latter with his ascending the throne, A. D. 631. The era of the Zoroastrians is accordingly twenty years behind the era of Yezdegerd. The Parsis of India always follow the era of Yezdegerd. In Persia, on the contrary, the other era must have been up to a certain time the more common of the two, in the colophons it is often designated as Persian. In such cases the reckoning is made from the year 651, but generally with the express addition, "after the twentieth year of Yezdegerd," i. e. counting from the twentieth year after his ascending the throne. The oldest quotable instance for this era is the colophon of Mâhvindâd, first copyist of the Dinkard, A. D. 1020, a contemporary therefore of Albîrûnî (cf. West, S.B.E. vol. xxxvii, Intr. 34). The same formula is found in the later colophons to the Dinkard, in Jp1, K13, F2, Mf1. Copyists who had emigrated from Iran sometimes employed this method of dating also in India, e. g. Mitrô-âpân in K20 fol. 51; but it is particularly in K20 that the confusion regarding dates is great. Moreover, even in certain cases where the older Persian Mss. do not specifically add the twentieth year of Yezdegerd, we have nevertheless to accept that the calculation is made from the year A. D. 651. In K43 we have in succession in three colophons of the same copyist three different datings, namely: A. 20. Y. 936, A. Y. 938 and the Parsi year 943 A. 20 Y. It is evident that all three dates in this order presuppose the same era, namely, that counted from 651. Also Rûstam who emigrated from Iran, reckons in K7 according to the "Pârsî Year" without mentioning the twentieth year. At a later period, or from about the year 1600, the use of the common Yezdegerd era became established in Iran by the side of the Zoroastrian. Mf2 is dated A. Y. 987 (without the twentieth year). Now, since a brother of Khûsrôhô, copyist of Mf2, namely Mitrô-âpân, copied the Dinkard (West, supra, p. 38) in the year 1594 (Pârsî year 943 after the twentieth year of Yezdegerd), it is much more probable that his brother wrote in 1618 (reckoned according to the common Yezdegerd era) and not in 1638 (according to the Zoroastrian era). After about 1700, the twentieth year appears to have become merely a formula no longer understood, and the common Yezdegerd era became the usual one in Persia. In F2 there are two copies by the same scribe, bound together (and in reverse order), the first is dated 28. Dai A. 20. Y. 1075, the second 21. Dai A. Y. 1075. It is evident that a space of twenty years did not elapse between the two copies. Both dates must therefore be computed as 1706 A. D. Nevertheless, as long as the various methods of dating have not been fully investigated and established, a certain caution is advisable. Therefore even in cases after 1700 where the Pârsî year is expressly mentioned I have, nevertheless, left both possibilities open.

(Avestâ-Sanskrit) fol. 1; the end of the Mâh Ny. (Av.-Skr.); fol. 15 with the beginning has been lost; Âtash Ny. (Av.-Skr.) fol. 20; Yasht 1,1-23 (Av.-Skr.) fol. 30; Âfringân Dahmân (Av.-Skr.) fol. 43; Âfringân Arda-Fravash, only Yasht 13,49-52.156.157 containing (Av.-Skr.) fol. 49; Âfr. Gahanbâr fol. 51b-62b. Then Pâzand texts with Sanskrit. Very valuable Ms.

H3, consists of two parts which have been bound together; the first part badly written, paged, contains Yasht 10 on 64 foll.; the second, better written, contains Yashts 17. 18. 19; 50 foll. unpaged. $8^1/_8 : 5^1/_2$ in. Modern manuscript.

H4, Mihir Yasht, 82 foll., $9^1/_8 : 4^3/_4$ in., dated Saṃvat 1877 (A. D. 1820).

H5, Fravardin Yasht, 42 foll., $6^3/_4 : 3^1/_2$ in.

J (Jamaspji Minocheherji Jamasp Asana, M. A., Ph. D., Dastur in Bombay):

J1, Vendîdâd sâda, carelessly written.

J2, Yasna with Pahlavî translation, copied by Mitrô-âpân-i Kai Khûsrôb, finished on the day Vohûman of the month Fravardin A. Y. 692 (= January 26, 1323). The copyist gives no information regarding his predecessors. The Ms. is doubly paged, first with Devanâgari numerals, then with Arabic. After fol. 333 the two pagings differ; altogether there are 385 foll. according to the Arabic pagination, but 389 according to the Devanâgari count. Foll. 1, 2, 150 (from Y. 21,3 [illegible] to the end) and probably the last leaf are lost. Fol. 210a (Y. 33,4) to fol. 210b line 4 (Y. 33,5) appears to have been written by another, but still an equally old hand, so also fol. 212. The Ms. is much damaged by corrosive ink and by white ants. $10^3/_4 : 8^3/_4$ in., 15 lines to the page. The Ms. is now at Oxford and has recently been reproduced by the collotype process.[1]

J3. Yasna with Neryosangh's Sanskrit translation, $8^3/_8 : 5^1/_2$ in. The old Ms., written by the first hand, breaks off with [illegible] (Y. 54,1) at fol. 260a. At fol. 260b there is a Pahlavi colophon by a later hand and at foll. 261-263, likewise by a younger hand, a piece of the missing Yasna text is supplied. The Ms. has suffered much from damp and in passages it is in utter decay. Y. 11,3-8 are wanting in Avestâ and Sanskrit; instead of which, three pages are left vacant. Writing and paper old; cf. J4, K6, P11.

J4, Yasna with Neryosangh's Sanskrit translation. 219 foll., $13^1/_2 : 8^1/_4$ in., without date, modern, goes directly or indirectly back to J3.

J5, Yasna sâda, about two hundred years old, incomplete and very incorrect. There are still 136 foll. extant, these extend to Y. 36. $8^7/_8 : 5^1/_8$ in.

J6, Yasna sâda, without date, according to the handwriting about three hundred years old, very ornately written, much corrected by a second hand, 210 foll., $6^3/_4 : 3^7/_8$ in. The first three leaves and also the last leaf are missing. The Ms. begins in Y. 1,7. It has been much damaged by excessive usage. Several lost leaves have been supplied by a second hand, e. g. in chapters 19 and 65.

J7, Yasna sâda with Kiriâ, 193 foll., $9^7/_8 : 6$ in., not old, but a very careful Ms.

J8, 99 foll., $9^1/_8 : 7^1/_2$ in., unbound, contains: (1) Vîspered sâda, foll. 1-91, the first leaf is lost; (2) the two Sîrôzas, fol. 92 to the end. The last leaves are quite destroyed. The Ms. is rather incorrect.

J9, Khorda Avestâ with Sanskrit translation. $8^3/_4 : 6$ in. According to the Âçîrvâda written after Saṃvat 1400 (saṃvatsareshu caturdaçaçateshu amukaḍâvarshe).[1] The character of the writing of this Ms. is quite peculiar. The closely related Ms. H2 has also in its handwriting much likeness to J9. Several signs recall the style of writing in S1 which is equally original. Avestâ and Pâzand are written in red, Sanskrit in black. In spite of its comparative antiquity this Ms. leaves much to be desired as regards correctness. The beginning is lost, the old Ms. extends from foll. 3 to 107. To the old Ms., however, there are prefixed modern leaves with a separate paging (foll. 1-24). The modern leaves contain: Neryosangh's usual Sanskrit introduction (1b-2a); Avestâ alphabet (2a-b); Nirang-i Kustî (Av.-Skr.) 2b-9a; Srôsh Bâj (Av.-Skr.) 9a-18a; Hôshbâm (Av.-Skr.) 18a-24b. Contents of the old Ms.: Khurshêd Nyâish (Av.-Skr.) foll. 3a-13b; Mâh Yasht (Av.-Skr.) 13b-17a; Âtash Nyâish (Av.-Skr.) 17a-25b; Mihir Nyâish 10-16 (Av.) 25b-26b; Âbân Nyâish (Avestâ, abridged) 26b-28a; Hôrmezd Yasht 1-23 (Av.-

Skr.), 24-29, 31-33 (Av.) foll. 28a-41b; Nîrangs (Guj. with some Av. and Skr.) 41b-51a; Patits (Pâz. and some Skr.) 51a-80a; marriage formula (Skr.) 80a-82b; Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht 1-7, 10-13 (Av.) 82b-84b; Nîrang i bôî dâdan (Pâz.-Skr.) 84b-88a; Dahmân Âfrîngân Y. 60,2-7 (Av.-Skr.) 88b-91b; Âçîrvâd Âfr. 1,8-12 (Av.-Skr.) 91b-94a; Âçîrvâd-i Fravardiyân Âfr. 2,4=Yt. 13,49-52.156.157 (Av.-Skr.) 94a-96b; Gahanbâr Âfrîngân Âfr. 3,3-13 (Av.-Skr.) 96b-106b, a leaf is missing after 103; Nîrang-i sihânâ 106b-107b.

J10, Khorda Avestâ and Yasht codex, 540 foll., undated, $7^7/_8 : 5^1/_2$ in., modern Ms., with ornamental writing, but very inexact. Contents of the Avestâ pieces: Avestâ alphabet; introductory prayers; Nyâishes and Gâhs entire; the entire Yashts; Sîrôza Yasht (= Sîr. 1 and 2); Âfrîngân Rapithwin, Âfr. Gahanbâr, Âfr. Gâthâ. In addition to many Nîrangs in Pâzand.

J11, Vishtâsp sâda, careful copy of K4, written by Jâmâsp Âsâ, who died 1753.

J15, Khorda Avestâ and Vîspered, both with Pahlavî translation, 136 foll., $8^3/_4 : 7^7/_8$ in. Contents: Âfrîngân Gahanbâr, Âfr. Dahmân, Âfr. Gâthâ, Âfr. Zartusht; Khurshêd Nyâish; Mâh Yasht; Hôrmezd Yasht 1-22; both Sîrôzas; Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht; Vîspered.

J16, Khorda Avestâ, modern, 188 foll., $11^1/_2 : 7^1/_8$ in., contains: Yasht 1-3. 11. 14. 16. 18; Gâh 1-5; Avestâ fragments; Sîrôzas.

J17, Khorda Avestâ, old, with handwriting of a peculiar character, but very careless. The Ms. proper comprises 187 foll., $6^1/_4 : 5^1/_8$ in.; in addition there is a Pâzand-Sanskrit glossary of 34 foll., separately paged. Contains Avestâ fragments and other things.

Jb (Jamsetji Bomanjee Wadia):

Vendîdâd in Avestâ, Pahlavî and Gujerati in five volumes, quite modern, used only for the beginning.

Jm (Jamshedji Mânekji Unwalla, Mobed):

Jm1, Yasna sâda, not paged, $7^1/_2 : 4$ in., badly written.

Jm2, Vendîdâd sâda, 272 foll., $14^5/_8 : 11^1/_2$ in.

Jm3, Vendîdâd sâda, 365 foll., $10^5/_8 : 9^1/_2$ in.

Jm4, Khorda Avestâ (designated at first as R1 in consequence of a misunderstanding), $13 : 9^7/_8$ in. The Ms. contains in the Âçîrvâda fol. 68 the date A. Y. 721 (A. D. 1352), with which the handwriting and paper would agree. The Ms. is in general carefully written. In spite of its antiquity, however, a number of the texts have much degenerated. The Ms. has suffered much in places and is much patched. Of the old Ms. there are still preserved only foll. 7-42 and 64-71, between which is a great gap. The first six leaves are supplied by a later hand. Contents: Introductory prayers (Kustî Nîrang etc.); Khurshêd Nyâish. Thus far the modern leaves. The old Ms. contains: Mihir Nyâish fol. 7b, Mâh Nyâish 8a, Âtash Nyâish 9a; Hôrmezd Yasht 10, Ardabahisht Yasht 13b, Haft Yasht 15b, Bahirâm Yasht 17a, Khordâd Yasht 22, Gôsh Yasht 24a, Dîn Yasht 26b, Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht 28; Âfrîngân i Gahanbâr 35, Âfr. Dahmân 37, Âfr. Fravardiyân ib., Âfr. Srôsh 38a; Pâzand Âfrîn Gahanbâr 38b, Âfrîn Gâthâ 41a; abridged Sîrôza 42; Avestâ fragments 65b; Nîrangs 67; Âçîrvâda 68b; Âbân Nyâish 70.

Jm5, Vîspered sâda, 120 foll., $10^1/_4 : 6^3/_4$ in. The Vîspered extends from fol. 1 to 106; there are also added Âfrîngân Rapithwin (foll. 106-108) and some Pâzand texts.

Jp (Jamshedji Peshotanji Sanjana, Dastur in Bulsar):

Jp1, Vendîdâd sâda from Iran, Avestâ with Nîrang in Pahlavî, 319 foll., $15 : 9^7/_8$ in. Handsomely and carefully written, paged at first with Persian numbers in words, but later with Persian numerals. Foll. 1 and 2 are lost. The Ms., like many other Vendîdâd sâdas, has a double colophon, after Vd. 9 and at the end. The copyist[1] according to the colophon is Frêdûn Marzapân Frêdûn Vâhrôm Rûstôm Bôndâr Shahmardân Dînyâr, who copied the Ms. from a Ms. of his father (Marzapân[2]), who in turn had made a copy of the Ms. of Shatrô-êyâr[3] Êrdashir Aîric Rûstâm Aîric Kabâd. Frêdûn copied Jp1 for Frêdûn Vêh-mard Frêdûn Gôpatshah Rûstôm Bôndâr Malkâ-mardân Dînô-aîyyâr, and had at the same time the advantage of the advice of his father and of the latter's brother Vêh-mard Frêdûn Vâhrôm. The transcript was finished on the day Mânsarspend of the month Âtûr A. 20. Y. 987 (July 13, 1638). A second colophon, about a hundred years younger, says that Dastur Rûstâm Gûshtâsp Êrdashir (the copyist of Mf1 and F2) had looked the Ms. through, approved it, and had given the copyist Frêdûn his blessing.—It is only on the margin that this valuable Ms. is much damaged and patched.

This collection was for the most part acquired by Rask in the year 1820 in Bombay; 35-43 come from the property of Westergaard; cf. Codices Orientales Bibliothecae Regiae Havniensis Pars i p. 111.

K1, Vendidâd with the Pahlavî translation, 340 foll., $11^{1}/_{4}:8^{3}/_{4}$ in., 16 lines to the page. Written by Herbad Mitrô-âpân Kai Khûsrôb and finished on the day Dên of the month Tir A. Y. 693 (May 17, 1324) at Cambay. Before giving his own postscript, Mitrô-âpân copied in the colophon of his predecessor Rûstakhm[1] Mitrô-âpân Marzapân (dated on the day Spendarmad of the month Fravardin without the year) and also that of the latter's predecessor Aêrdashir Vohûman Rôj-vêh Shah-bûrjin Shah-mard (dated on the day Srôsh of the month Tir of the year 554 = May 10, 1205).—Foll. 1-92 (to Vd. $5,_{26}$) are entirely wanting, the Avestâ text begins at fol. 93a with [illegible]; foll. 184-303 (= Vd. $8,_{74}$-$18,_{71}$) which were not bound up with the rest of the codex, were so much damaged that they could not be collated. In the year 1840, however, Westergaard had made a very accurate tracing of these damaged leaves. The outlines of the gaps and worm-eaten places are designated in it with exactness. This tracing I have used and have denoted it as K1a, except in cases where the agreement between the tracing itself and the old copies from K1 preclude all doubt as to the reading of the old codex. The confusion in the eighteenth Fargard is the same as in L4.

K2, Vendidâd with Pahlavi translation, 677 pages, pp. 644-647 are wanting; transcript and text-revision of Dastur Dârâb; without value for text criticism.

, fragment of the Vendidâd with the Pahlavi translation, 39 pp., $12^{1}/_{4}:7^{7}/_{8}$ in., 15 lines to the page, contains the beginning of the Vendidâd as far as $2,_{32}$; much abridged at the end, also considerably damaged. The Ms. breaks off at $2,_{32}$ in the middle of a page, it is therefore a copy of the Vendidâd that was begun but not finished. Above the Pahlavî translation a Modern Persian interlinear version is often written.

, likewise a fragment of the Vendidâd with Pahlavî translation, 17 foll., $11^{1}/_{4}:7^{3}/_{4}$ in., 15 lines to the page. The Avestâ text is written in red ink. In the Pahlavî text there is also in this Ms. the Modern Persian interlinear version. The last page is written in full and breaks off in the middle of $2,_{18}$. The continuation appears to be lost. K3b appears to be older than K3a.

K4, Vîshtâsp sâda (containing Yasna, Vîspered and the eight Fargards of the Vîshtâsp Yasht). Written in Kirman by Vêh-mard Frêdûn Vêh-mard Frêdûn Vêh-mard Gôpatshah Rûstôm Bôndâr Shah-mard Dênô-yâr and finished on the day Vohûman of the month Vohûman A. Y. 1092 (July 26, 1723). The copyist mentions both his predecessors by name. Subsequently a favorable judgment was passed on the Ms. by Jâmâsp Irdîshîr Anoshak-rûbân, to whom it belonged. 230 foll., $9^{1}/_{4}:7^{7}/_{8}$ in., 15 lines to the page, begins with fol. 4. Carefully written Ms. from an excellent source.

K5, Yasna with Pahlavî translation, 327 foll. (paged with Devanâgarî numbers), $10^{3}/_{4}:8^{3}/_{4}$ in., 17 lines to the page. Double colophon in Pahlavi and Sanskrit, fol. 326b. According to this, Herbad Mitrô-âpân Kaî-Khûsrôvô Mitrô-âpân Spend-dâd Mitrô-âpân Marzapân Bâhrâm copied the Ms. in Cambay from a Ms. of Herbad Rûstâm Mitrô-âpân to order for Câhil Sangan in the aforesaid city. Finished on the day Âsmân of the month Dên A. Y. 692, Saṃvat 1379 (November 17, 1323). The first leaf and foll. 70-77 are wanting; foll. 70-77 (Y. $9,_{29}$-$10,_{21}$) still existed in Westergaard's day, but were in utter decay; he made a tracing of the same in the year 1840, which I have designated as K5b. The Yasna proper begins at fol. 5a of the Ms.

K6, Yasna with Sanskrit translation, 437 foll. Careful copy of J3, extends to Y. $57,_{29}$.

K7, a collective codex consisting of three parts of different ages bound together, $8^{1}/_{4}:4^{3}/_{4}$ in.

The first and most valuable part contains the Vispered in double form, first the Vîspered sâda with Nîrang (K7b) as far as fol. 104, and then the Vispered in briefest form with the Pahlavî translation (K7a) from fol. 108b-159. The first 22 foll. are wanting, so that the Vîspered sâda begins with Chap. 4; likewise foll. 71 and 80 (containing parts of Chaps. 19 and 24). In K7a there are 2 foll. (= Vp. 1,2-3 and Vp. 9,3-4) missing and supplied sec. m. Between the two Vispereds are found the Nirang i Âtash fol. 104b, an Avestâ fragment fol. 106b and the colophon. Both the Vispereds apparently come from the same scribe. The name of the same is given in the colophon in fol. 107 as Herbad Rûdastakhm[1] Mitrô-âpân Marzapân Dahîshnaiyyâr in the land of the Hindus in the city of Ankalêsar. The postscript at the end is dated on the day Âsmân of the month Spendarmad of the Persian year 627 (= December 28, 1278). The Ms. actually could be so old. The ugly style of the handwriting is very antique.

[1] His great-great-uncle.

The second part (K7c) is a Khorda Avestâ with Bhâshâ translation, without date, ornately written, following contents: Khurshêd, Mâh, Âtash Nyâishes; Hôrmezd and Hôm Yashts; Patits; a fragment of the Âfringân Dahmân, Âfr. Arda-Fravash and Gahanbâr (last incomplete).

The third part contains a Persian treatise on the Barashnom, dated A.Y. 1009 (A.D. 1640), in it an Avestâ fragment.

K8, Iranian Vispered sâda, 128 foll., 8 : 6 in. Very handsome manuscript.[2] It appears to be an extract from K4.

K9, Vendîdâd sâda, 703 pp., $11^7/_8 : 10^1/_8$ in. Careful copy of Mf2, according to Westergaard copied by Mobed Darab Sohrab A.Y. 1115 (A.D. 1746).

K10, Vendîdâd sâda, 294 foll., $15^1/_8 : 11^1/_4$ in., belonging to the twelfth century of the Yezdegerd era and nineteenth century of the Saṃvat era, must therefore have been copied after the year 1743. The last two numbers of the year are not filled out in the colophon. The Ms. is much worn and soiled. Foll. 3-6 are wanting.

K11, 317 foll., $9^7/_8 : 8^1/_4$ in., A.Y. 1016, Saṃvat 1703 (= A.D. 1647); contents are the same as in H1, namely, (1) Yasna sâda; (2) Sîrôza; (3) Vispered sâda. The Yasna in particular is much corrected by a second hand.

K12, Khorda Avestâ with the entire Yashts, 378 foll., A.Y. 1170 (A.D. 1801), contains: the introductory prayers, Nyâishes, Vîspa Humata, 5 Gâhs, 22 Yashts, Afringâns, both the Sîrôzas. The Ms. is very slovenly written. At the end several leaves are wanting.

K13, Fravardîn Yasht, from Iran, 55 foll. including the colophon, $8 : 4^5/_8$ in., carefully written by Jâmâsp Ḥakim Ardishîr. The date of the colophon is A. 20. Y. 1080. Instead of 80, however, 90 is intended, as the scribe tells us in a Persian gloss placed above it. The correct date of its completion is accordingly: day Srôsh of the month Dîn 1090 A.Y. (= July 11, 1721).[1]

K14, Fravardîn Yasht, 41 foll., $7^1/_2 : 5^7/_8$ in., written in three columns, very careless and incorrect; without date, but modern.

K15, collective codex, containing pieces from the Yasna and Khorda Avestâ; five parts bound together, namely, (1) Fragment from the Yasna with Neryosangh's Sanskrit translation, 39 foll.; (2) Âfringân Dahmân with Sanskrit translation (incomplete), 8 foll.; (3) Patit Peshmano and Khurshêd, Mâh, Âtash Nyâishes with Sanskrit translation, 45 foll.; (4) Namaskâras and Nirangs, Avestâ fragments among them; (5) Tîr and Mihir Yashts, 93 foll.

K16, collection of smaller Yashts, 63 foll., $4^7/_8 : 5^1/_4$ in., without date, modern, but not worthless; contains Yashts in the following order: Bahirâm (fol. 1), Awerdâd (fol. 36), Dîn (fol. 44), Ashtâd (fol. 52), Râm (fol. 58) and here breaks off in the middle of Par. 46. There is partly a Persian interlinear version above the Avestâ text.

K17, Khorda Avestâ from Surat, dated Saṃvat 1738

[1] The copyist of the antecedent of K1, K5 and M6 (A. V.).

[2] According to Westergaard written by Dastur Kâûs, son of Feridun A.Y. 1149 (A.D. 1779), but according to West's notice this Dastur who in 1736 came from Iran to Surat and later became the first Kadmi-Dastur, died in 1778.

[1] The colophon gives the history of the origin of the Ms. The Parsis in India about a thousand years after their immigration were no longer in possession of the genuine Hôm plant nor of the Frohârâm Yasht. Jâmâsp accordingly prepared this copy for his Indian co-religionists, at the special request in fact of Mobed Rustamji, as we may read between the lines. According to the colophon in M5 (dated 21/1 1093 = October 18, 1723) Jâmâsp arrived in Bombay on 1/7 1091 = April 6, 1722; he heard there that Rustamji meanwhile had died. After some days he travelled to Surat where he was received by the three sons of Rustamji. Here he presented to the Parsis the Fravardîn Yasht which he had brought with him, and the Hôm plant. On May 5, 1723, he returned again to Bombay and there transcribed the Fravardîn Yasht in Persian characters (preserved in M5). On 26/1 1093 (= October 23, 1723) he started once more for his home. Inasmuch as according to M5 he must have prepared the copy in Iran before he left home, the correct date must therefore be 1721. The uncertainty in the writing of the Pahlavi number renders the conjecture possible that we have to do with a very early copy of the Jâmâsp manuscript. The postscript of Jâmâsp in K4 should be carefully compared with the handwriting of K13.

(= A. D. 1681), 208 foll., $9^{1}/_{4} : 4^{3}/_{4}$ in.; contains many Bâjes; among the Avestâ texts are the two Sîrôzas and similar litanies.

K18, consists of three Khorda Avestâs with Pahlavî or Persian translation bound together; namely, K18a with Pahlavî translation, contains the introductory prayers, the Nyâishes 1 and 3, Hôrmezd Yasht, the small and the great Sîrôza, Âfringân Gahanbâr and Dahmân, Yashts 11 and 3. This part is dated A. Y. 1160 (A. D. 1791). K18b (from the same hand as K18a) contains the Nyâishes: Âtash, Abân, Mihir with Pahlavî translation. K18c with Modern Persian translation contains the introductory prayers and the first three Nyâishes.

K19, part of a complete Khorda Avestâ and Yasht codex, the greater part of which has been lost; without date, modern, 318 foll. Contents: the introductory prayers; the five Nyâishes; Gâh 1 (beginning is wanting as some leaves have been lost), 2-5; Yasht $1\text{-}5_{,50}$. Furthermore Vîspa Humata and other fragments, all the Âfringâns.

K20, old Pahlavî codex, consisting of loose single fascicles ($10 : 6^{3}/_{4}$ in., 20 lines to the page), fully described by Haug and West, Introductory Essays (to the Ardâ-Vîrâf) p. 5, and West, S.B.E. vol. v, Intr. 27. Altogether there are fifteen fascicles besides a later fascicle K20b. In addition to the Bundahish and other Pahlavi texts the Ms. contains a fragment of the Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht (from Par. 6 on) with Pahlavî translation, on fol. 156 fragments from the Yasna, the Avestâ fragments from the Hâdhôkht Nask with Pahlavî translation (in the fourth fascicle) and the Farhang i oim (in the seventh fascicle). This Ms. coming from a single copyist contains several colophons of Mitrô-âpân of different dates, namely A.Y. 690, 720 and 700 (cf. West, supra).

K21, careless copy of K20, 173 foll., $10^{1}/_{8} : 8^{7}/_{8}$ in.

K22, contains the Mainyô i Khard (48 foll.), and the Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht with Pahlavî translation (5 foll.), without date, $10^{1}/_{4} : 6^{7}/_{8}$ in. Cf. the description by West, S.B.E. vol. xxiv, Intr. 19.

K36, Khorda Avestâ from Iran, 167 foll. (of which the first and 101-115 are wanting), $6^{1}/_{2} : 4^{3}/_{8}$ in., A. Y. 1073 (= A. D. 1704), contains: the introductory prayers; Nyâish 1-3 fol. 7; Âfringân Dahmân fol. 17, Âfr. Gahanbâr fol. 20, Âfr. Gâthâ; Âtash Nyâish fol. 25; Hôrmezd Yasht fol. 29 (Parr. 1-7 supplied by a second hand); Ardabahisht fol. 38; Srôsh (Y. 57) fol. 43; Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht fol. 52; Bahrâm fol. 54 (added by a second hand); Gâh 2-5 fol. 60; Yasna 16 fol. 68; both the Sîrôzas fol. 71; Mayâ Yasht (with Y. 65) fol. 109; Yasht 2 fol. 131; fragments etc.—Designated by Westergaard as M1.

K37 (M2 of Westergaard), Iranian Khorda Avestâ, without date, modern, $6 : 3^{7}/_{8}$ in. Contents: Yasht 1. 3. 11. 14 in Persian script pp. 1-86; Yasht 13 in Avestâ script p. 251, Yasht Gâhân (Y. 28-34) p. 399; Yasna 23. 26; Âb zôr (Y. 65) p. 481; Âtash Nyâish p. 490, all in Avestâ script.

K38 (M3 of W.), Iranian Khorda Avestâ, according to Westergaard A. Y. 1183 (A. D. 1814), 108 foll., $7^{1}/_{2} : 4^{1}/_{4}$ in. Contents: (1) Yasht $14_{,1\text{-}53}$ (12 foll.); (2) beginning of Yasht 9 (1 leaf); (3) Darûn Yasht (containing Yasna pieces); (4) Fravardîn Yasht (foll. 30-90); (5) Sirôza, Mâh, Gâthâ, Gâh 1, Yasht 2, fragments. Valuable Ms.

K39 (M4), contains only Yasht 18 (foll. 1-9) and Patit Irâni in Pâzand, the first is dated according to Westergaard A. Y. 1188 (A. D. 1818). Worthless Ms.

K40 (M5), modern copy of Yashts 3. 6. 7. 10. 14. 15, made for Westergaard in the year 1842 by the same scribe as W2.

K43, old valuable Pahlavî codex, fully described by West, S.B.E. vol. xxiv, Intr. 18, and vol. v, Intr. 39 seq.; contains a Yasna fragment (Y. $57_{,2\text{-}6}$) tacked on at the end.

Kh (Khorshedji Bejanji, Dastur):

Kh1, Vispered sâda with Yasna complete, written in Iranian style, modern.

Kh2, consists of two parts bound together. The first part on white paper contains the Darûn Bâj, 45 foll. The second part on blue paper contains the Vishtâsp Yasht and Pâzand texts, 36 foll. $9^{7}/_{8} : 6^{3}/_{4}$ in. Iranian style.

L(ondon, India Office, de Guise's Collection):

L1, Vendîdâd sâda, 250 foll., $11^{7}/_{8} : 9^{7}/_{8}$ in. A. Y. 804 (A. D. 1435), but the genuineness of the date is doubtful, because fol. 246, on which the date is found, is modern and the date itself is a subsequent insertion by another hand and in different ink. Nevertheless the Ms. is very old. The text itself ends at fol. 247a.

L2, Vendîdâd sâda, 350 foll., $14^{1}/_{4} : 11$ in. A. Y. 1129, Saṃvat 1816 (A. D. 1759), written in Surat by Rustam Vâhrâm Dârâb Sôhrâb. Carefully written Ms.

L3, Vendîdâd sâda, 294 foll., 14 : $10^{5}/_{8}$ in. Less carefully written.

L4, Vendîdâd with Pahlavî translation, $10^{1}/_{2}$: $8^{3}/_{4}$ in., 15 lines to the page. Of the old Ms. there remain only foll. 33-56 (= Vd. 3,14 end of the P.V. as far as 4,29) and foll. 153-292 or 166-304 (extending from Vd. 9,1 as far as 22,19). The last part is doubly paged, by an older hand with foll. 166-304, and by a later hand with foll. 153-292. Fol. 190b is not written upon, but the text does not show any break. Chaps. 3 and 18 are partly in great disorder. After Vd. 3,25 comes 3,29-32; 26-29; 32 to the end. In Vd. 18 the order of the paragraphs is: 1-7 (to · 16-44; 12-16; 45-51; 7-11; 58 to the close. Parr. 52-58 (to [illegible]) have entirely fallen out. As the transpositions begin in the midst of the page and are found also in K1, the true order must have been already disturbed in an older copy. The last leaves in L4 were considerably misplaced before the paging was done. For instance, fol. 288 belongs between foll. 278 and 279. After fol. 289 the leaves are to be arranged thus: 293. 290. 291. 292. [The Ms. has since been rebound and some of the misplacements of leaves have been done away with.] The very last leaf with the colophon is wanting. The colophon of L4, however, has been copied in Pt2 (q. v.). The copyist of L4 accordingly, as the Ms. itself in fact long since showed, is the well-known Mitrô-âpân Kai-Khûsrôb Mitrô-âpân, who copied the Ms. in Nosari and finished it on the day Khûrdad of the month Âvân A.Y. 692, Saṃvat 1378 (= August 28, 1323). The old Ms. has been seriously damaged in the middle of the leaves by damp and by corrosive ink, and has been restored by a later hand upon paper that has been pasted on. The lost foll. 1-32 and 57-152 have likewise been supplied by two later scribes. These modern supplements are designated as L4a.

L5, Vendîdâd sâda, 387 foll., $11^{1}/_{2}$: $9^{1}/_{2}$ in., written in Bombay A. D. 1792, modern, quite careless. Attached to the Ms. upon a separate sheet is a copy of the Vîshtâsp Yasht by another scribe.

L6, Yasna with Modern Persian interlinear version, 198 foll., $10^{1}/_{4}$: $5^{7}/_{8}$ in., written 1741. Quite worthless Ms.

L9, Khorda Avestâ with translation in Bhâshâ, 214 foll., 8 : $4^{1}/_{4}$ in., according to the Âçirvâda dated Saṃvat 1701 (A. D. 1644). First leaf lost. Contents: the introductory prayers; Nyâish 1-5 (foll. 29 seq.); Hôrmezd Yasht (foll. 84 seq.); Nîrangs and Patits, Âfrîngân Dahmân (foll. 149 seq.), Arda-Fravasha, Gahanbâr; Âçirvâda.

L11 (No. 21 of the E. I. Library Catalogue), Khorda Avestâ of Dastur Dârâb, 277 foll., $8^{3}/_{4}$: $5^{1}/_{8}$ in., written in Nosari A. D. 1723, as far as fol. 88 by a later hand than the rest. Contents: the introductory prayers; Nyâish 1-5 (foll. 15 seq.); Âfrîngân Dahmân (foll. 80 seq.); Gâthâ, Gahanbâr; Gâh 1-5 (foll. 97 seq.); Vîspa Humata (140 seq.); the Yashts: Hôrmezd (143), Ameshâspend (160), Ardabahisht (168), the two Srôshes (179. 191), Hôm (201), Vanand (203), Bahirâm (206); various Bâjes and Nîrangs, among them several Avestâ fragments; the small and the great Sîrôza (260. 269).

L12, Khorda Avestâ with Pahlavî translation, 113 foll., $7^{1}/_{2}$: $5^{3}/_{8}$ in., A. Y. (11?)24 = A. D. 1755. Contents: the introductory prayers; Khurshêd, Mâh, Âtash Nyâishes; Hôrmezd Yasht; Yasna 57; both the Sîrôzas; Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht. All with P.V. Carefully written Ms.

L13, Yasna sâda, handsomely written Ms. of medium age, without date, $8^{1}/_{4}$: $4^{1}/_{2}$ in. The old Ms. begins at fol. 22 with Y. 4,7 and ends at fol. 255 with Y. 71,29. The beginning which is wanting has been supplied by a later hand, on 24 foll. and the remainder on 3 foll. Also foll. 249 and 250 (Y. 71,10-13) of the old Ms. are wanting.

L16, the Nyâishes and Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht, modern and quite worthless.

L17, Yasna sâda, 198 foll., $9^{1}/_{8}$: $6^{1}/_{4}$ in., finished A. Y. 920 (A. D. 1551) by Herbad Ardishir. A careless copy from K5 or a transcript of it, without critical value.

L18 (Cat. No. 20), Khorda Avestâ and Yasht codex. The end which is missing is supplied by a second hand. The order is considerably disturbed. The disturbances were probably in the earlier copy which lay before the scribe. The old Ms. comprises 490 foll., $9^{7}/_{8}$: $6^{3}/_{4}$ in. Contents: Avestâ alphabet (sec. m.); the introductory prayers; Nyâish 1-5; Âfrîngân Dahmân (fol. 98), Gahanbâr (fol. 109), Âfrîngân in Pâzand (fol. 126); the Gâhs (fol. 155); Yasht 1-4, after Yt. 4 there follows immediately on the same page (fol. 203) Yt. 11, then 11a. 14 (fol. 223), then on a new page (fol. 241) Yt. 5, then 6-10. 12. 13 to Par. 16, then on fol. 385 Parr. 64-123, then Parr. 16-89, then 123 to the end; after that Yt. 20 and 21; Avestâ fragments (foll. 452. 455. 468); shorter prayers; Yasht 16 (fol. 491a). 18. 19 (the greater part by a second hand).

L20 (Cat. No. 18), Yasna sâda with Kiriâ, modern, 169 foll., $9^{7}/_{8}:5^{1}/_{2}$ in.

L25, Khorda Avestâ with Modern Persian translation, written by the same scribe in two different styles of writing, from fol. 32 in Iranian style of script. 84 foll., $9^{7}/_{8}:5^{1}/_{2}$ in., A.H. 1223 (= A.D. 1803). Contents: the introductory prayers; Nyâish 1-5; Hôrmezd Yasht; Âfringân Gahanbâr, Gâthâ, Dahmân.

L27 (older signature: Persian 2642), Vispered sâda, 121 foll., $6^{1}/_{4}:5^{1}/_{4}$ in. The Vispered ends at fol. 86. Then follows the last part of the Yasna with many abridgments.

, Vendidâd with the Pahlavî translation, 287 foll., $10^{1}/_{2}:6^{1}/_{8}$ in., without date, modern, goes back to K1.

M4, collective codex with various datings, 246 foll., $8^{1}/_{2}:4^{3}/_{4}$ in. Contents: Hôrmezd Yasht transcribed and translated into Persian (foll. 24-33), A.Y. 1179 (A.D. 1810); Vîshtâsp Yasht; Khurshêd Nyâish with P.V., Srôsh Yasht (Y. 57) with P.V., Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht with P.V., both the Sirôzas with P.V., Vîspered with P.V., these five texts dated A.Y. 1107 (A.D. 1737); Bahirâm Yasht with Persian translation; Khordâd Yasht, Âfrîn Myazd and Yasht Ameshâspend, 8-15, all three with Persian translation.

M6, collective codex of Pêshyôtan Râm Kâmdin, two volumes (M6a, M6b), contains Pahlavî texts partly accompanied by Avestâ texts. The Ms. is accurately described by Haug and West, Introductory Essays (to the Ardâ-Vîrâf) p. 4, and West, S.B.E. vol. v, Intr. 29. Only the first 13 foll. are probably from another hand. To several texts Pêshyôtan has appended a special postscript. The order of succession of the dates is the natural one, there is no doubt therefore as to the genuineness. M6a comprises 149 foll., $11^{5}/_{8}:7$ in., and contains the following Avestâ texts: Khurshêd Nyâish (by the other hand); Vispered (dated A.Y. 766 [A D. 1397]); fragments from the Gâthâs; three Fargards from the Hâdhôkht Nask, all with P.V. M6b comprises 104 foll. and contains among other things the Yashts Ameshâspend and Khurdâd.

M7, collective volume, 235 foll, $8^{1}/_{8}:6^{1}/_{8}$ in., dated A.Y. 1178 (A.D. 1809), cf. West, S.B.E. vol. v, Intr. 31. The volume contains the following Avestâ texts: Fragments from Yasna 45, Vendidâd 1 and Yasht 17.

M21, collective volume, 152 foll., $5^{1}/_{2}:4^{1}/_{2}$ in., with different datings, contains Gâh 1-3 (these not dated).

M25, collective volume, contains fragments from Yasht 8. 14. 3. 4. 2, Yasna 35. Quite worthless.

M26, Fragments from the Yasna.

M35, a bundle of Avestâ fragments, contains fragments from the Yasna and Vendidâd with P.V., Yasht 11. 3. 20. 21 and Rapithwin Gâh.

Mb (Mancherji Barzoji Powri, Mobed):

Mb1, Khorda Avestâ, 153 foll., $7^{1}/_{8}:4^{3}/_{4}$ in. In the Âçirvâda the Ms. has the date Samvat 1745 (A.D. 1689) corrected to 1717 or 1777. The beginning of the Ms. is lost; it begins with fol. 22. Contents: Nyâish 3-5

---

[1] Anquetil saw the Ms. in Oxford at Dr. Hunt's, cf. Zend-Avesta, I, 2 p. 8. I have no collation of a second Yasna in the Br. M. (A.Y. 1105 = A D 1736, No. 3 in Sachau).

(foll. 22-33); Yasht 1. 2. 3. 6. 7. 11. 20. 21 (foll. 33-65); Nirangs, Patits in Pâzand; Âfrîngân Dahmân, Gâthâ, shash Gahanbâr (foll. 82-93); Pâzand Âfrîngâns (fol. 95); vâda (fol. 123); Gâh 1-5 (foll. 128-137); Avestâ fragments, Pâzand formulas.

Mb2, Khorda Avestâ with Sanskrit or Bhâshâ translation, very neatly written; 267 foll., $6^{7}/_{8}:4^{1}/_{4}$ in. The first leaves appear to be wanting. Contents: Avestâ alphabet (fol. 20); introductory prayers; Nyâish 1. 3-5 (foll. 50-97); Hôrmezd and Hôm Yasht (foll. 116. 143); Pâzand texts (foll. 146-213); Âfr. Dahmân, Gâthâ, Gahanbâr (foll. 213. 224. 228).

Mf1, Iranian Yasna with Nirang (latter in Pahlavi and written in red ink), 145 foll., $9^{1}/_{4}:6^{7}/_{8}$ in., unbound, paged with Persian numerals, written by Rûstam Gûshtâsp Ardashîr for his son Vâhrôm Rûstam and finished on the day Zamyâd of the month Âvân A. 20. Y. 1090 (May 18, 1741, or May 23, 1721). Excellent Ms.

Mf2, Iranian Vendîdâd sâda with Nirang, 324 foll. paged with Persian numerals, $15:9^{7}/_{8}$ in., with double colophon, after Vd. 9 and at the end. Written by Khûsrôb[1] Anôshirvân Rûstam Shaharyâr Mâh-vindâd Vâhrâm Mihir-âpân Anôshirvân Rûstam Shaharyâr Vâhrâm Dahishn-yâr Mihir-âpân in Turkâbâd in Vilayet Yazd and finished on the day Âtûr of the month Âvân A Y. 987 (May 29, 1618). Handsomely written valuable Ms., many corrections by a later hand.—Westergaard designated excerpts from this Ms. by R.

Mf3, Iranian Khorda Avestâ, modern, but very correct. The Ms. comprises 228 foll., $5^{1}/_{4}:3^{1}/_{4}$ in., in addition to these, 4 foll. of newer paper. Contents: Hôrmezd Yasht, the five Gâhs, Mâh and Âtash Nyâish, Mayâ Yasht (with Y. 65), single prayers, the two Sîrôzas, Khurshêd Nyâish, Âfrîngân Dahmân, Darûn Yasht, Fravardîn Yasht, litanies in the style of the Sîrôzas.

Mf4, Yasna with the Pahlavî translation, 357 foll., $11:7^{1}/_{8}$ in., undated and probably somewhat younger than Pt4. Both are copied from the same original.

Ml (Manekji Limji Hataria in Teheran[1]):

Ml1, Vendîdâd sâda, seldom used.

Ml2, elegant modern codex, a collection of all the Avestâ texts and of many Avestâ fragments in Modern Persian script, put together for the most part from Iranian manuscripts.

Ml3, Vendîdâd with the Pahlavî translation, 322 foll., $9^{1}/_{2}:6^{3}/_{8}$ in., written A Y. 963 (A. D. 1594) by Ardashir Zivâ Vikâ Ardashîr Râm Kâmdîn in Broach. Careful copy from K1. Before his own colophon the scribe has copied also the first colophon of K1. Many leaves have been supplied by a later hand, namely foll. 65-80 (= Vd. 4,37 to 5,4), 84-85 (Vd. 5,7-9), 124-125 (Vd. 6,40-46), 148-149 (Vd. 7,59-74), 187 (Vd. 9,9-11), 194 (Vd. 9,25-27), 275-284 (Vd. 17,11-18,12), 288 (Vd. 18,9-59[2]), 293 (Vd. 18,74-19,1). The disorder in Chaps. 3 and 18 as in L4 or K1.

Ml4, Vendîdâd with the Pahlavî translation, 245 foll., $11^{5}/_{8}:8^{5}/_{8}$ in., written A.Y. 1227 (A.D. 1858), by Sôhrâb Pêshyôtan Ratanjî Sôhrâb, goes back first to a somewhat older Ms. of Barzôr Pâhlan Pêshyôtan Kavas Sôhrâb A.D. 1833, the colophon of which is included in copying. In the later Fargards the younger copyist has been sometimes influenced by Spiegel's edition.[3]

O(xford, Bodleiana):

O1, Yasna with Kiriâ (Signature: O 384), erroneously designated in the title upon the binding as Vendîdâd sâda, from the collection of Ouseley, 200 foll., $9^{7}/_{8}:5^{3}/_{4}$ in., written by Bhîkhâ Rustam Bahrâm Khûrshêd in Nosari and finished on the day Rashn of the month Ardabahisht A.Y. 1105 (December 11, 1735). Carefully written.[4]

O2, Vendîdâd sâda (Signature: Bodl. Or. 321, olim Arch. 85), 350 foll., $11^{1}/_{8}:9^{1}/_{8}$ in., A.Y. 1050, Saṃvat 1737 (A.D. 1681), brought to England by Rich. Cobbe in the year 1723. Anquetil saw this Ms. fastened to a chain in the Bodleian, cf. Anquetil i, 1 p. 458; i, 2 p. 3. On the inside is written: "Donum Dni Geo Bowcher Mercat. in Surat, in usum Biblioth. Bodleianae apud Oxonienses Anno Domini 1718."

[1] Since the death of their owner these Mss. are in the hands of a committee in Bombay.

[2] With the great confusion of the text.

[3] In fact misprints of Spiegel are found in Ml4: [illegible] 13,8, and corrections of Spiegel: [illegible] 18,8, [illegible] 18,26.

[4] Anquetil (i, 2 p. 9) mentions a Yasna from Surat A.Y. 1105 (A. D. 1735) preserved at Oxford in his time; this, together with a Ravaet, had been purchased by Frazer for five hundred Rupees and brought to England. This is probably not O1, but the Yasna of the Br. M. No 3 in Sachau.

O3, Khorda Avestâ (Signature: Frazer 258), 294 foll., $8^1/_2 : 5^1/_4$ in. and 5 foll. table of contents prefixed, A. Y. 1015 (A. D. 1646). On the inside by an old hand: "The Zend of Zeratusht in the ancient Persic character. Fras. p. 35." In the codex it is furthermore noted that Anquetil had seen it and had made mention of it, cf. Anquetil i, 2 p. 6. Contents: Avestâ alphabet; Nyâish 1-5 (fol. 17); Âfringân Dahmân, Gâthâ, Gahanbâr (foll. 103. 108. 113); Pâzand Gahanbâr; Gâh 1-5 (fol. 163); the Yashts: Hôrmezd (fol. 180), Ameshâspend (193), Ardabahisht (200), Khordâd (208), Gôsh (212), Srôsh Hâdhôkht (221), Rashn (230), Bahirâm (239), Dîn (256), Ashtâd (261), Hôm (264), Vanand (265); Bâj, Nirang with Avestâ fragments (foll. 269 etc.).

Pt (Peshotanji Behramji Sanjana, M. A., Ph. D., Dastur in Bombay):

Pt1, Khorda Avestâ with all the Yashts, 543 foll., $8^3/_8 . 5^1/_8$ in., the first 10 foll. are lost and have been supplied by a second hand. The old Ms. begins at fol. 11a with the Hôsh Bâm Also the colophon has been renewed by a second hand, but copied at all events from the original which is gone; it bears the date A. Y. 994 (A. D. 1625) and names as copyist the Herbad Dârâb in Surat, a descendant of Hormazdyâr Râmyâr. Contents: the introductory prayers; Nyâish 1-5 (foll. 15-45); Duâ Shatâish (Fragment iii in W, fol. 46); Patits; the five Gâhs (fol. 105); Âfr. Dahmân, Gâthâbyô, Gahanbâr, Rapithwin (foll. 134. 138. 143. 150); Pâzand Âfrîns, Avestâ fragments (foll. 203. 207. 208. 238. 248); Âfrin Zartusht (fol. 218); Nirangs; the entire Yashts in the customary order (foll. 256 to the end).

Pt2, Vendidâd with the Pahlavi translation, 315 pp, $11^1/_2 : 9^1/_2$ in., transcript from L4. The lost colophons of L4 are here preserved in copy. As in the case of K1 there are three colophons. The two oldest are with slight variations identical with the first two in K1, namely the colophon of Aêrdashîr and that of Rûstakhm. The third is the postscript proper of Mitrô-âpân to L4 (q. v.).

Pt3, Yasna and Vispered, 319 foll. (last leaf sec. m.), $8^3/_8 : 5^1/_8$ in., without date, contains: (1) Yasna sâda with Kiriâ (foll. 1-226); (2) Vispered sâda (foll. 227-319). The Ms. is carelessly written.

Pt4, Yasna with the Pahlavi translation, 567 pages, paged with Arabic figures, $13^3/_8 : 8^1/_8$ in., without date, but apparently by the same copyist as Pt2. According to the family tradition of the present owner, this Ms. was copied A.Y. 1149 (A.D. 1779-80) by Dastur Kâvasji Sohrâbji Mihirji-rânâ in Nosari and from an old Iranian Yasna. The latter is confirmed by the Pahlavî introduction to Pt4. Dastur Kâvasji later presented the Ms. to his teacher, Dastur Sâhib Rustamji Behramji Sanjânâ, the great-grandfather of Dastur Peshotan. The copyist of Pt4 reproduces the introduction of the Ms. before him, the scribe of which was named Hôshâng Siyâvakhsh Shatrôyâr Bakht-âfrîd, and gives interesting information about the descent of its antecedents.—In spite of its youth Pt4 is one of the most important Yasna codexes.

[1] For the correspondence of the present numbering I am indebted to a kind communication from Darmesteter.

S(urat):

S1, Yasna with the Sanskrit translation of Neryosangh. Excellent old Ms., of great independence and accuracy. The peculiar style of the writing is not always uniform, it often resembles the ordinary type of script. The scribe appears accordingly to have imitated, but not consistently, the style of writing of the Ms. before him. The first three leaves are wanting; the Ms. begins with [illegible] [illegible] in Y. 1,6. In Y. 26 the antecedent Ms. appears to have had a gap. The Ms. breaks off with [illegible] in Y. 46,19, the rest is lost. The remainder of the Sanskrit translation has been supplied by a hand that is quite modern. The entire Ms. has later been paged with Devanâgarî numbers; last leaf is 160, $12^{1}/_{4} : 9^{1}/_{8}$ in. The Ms. is not bound; the margin is much damaged and patched; the middle of the leaves is well preserved. The owner of the Ms., as I subsequently learned, is the Mobed Mancherji Barzoji Powri.

S2, Vendidâd sâda, modern, without special value.

W(ilson).[1]

From the collection of the Rev. Dr. John Wilson, now in the private possession of Lord Crawford in Wigan.

W1 (old No. 6), Khorda Avestâ from Persia, written in Iranian style, without date, belonging to about the beginning of the present century, 208 foll., $4^{1}/_{2} : 2^{15}/_{16}$ in., some leaves are missing, others misplaced in binding. Good Ms., akin to K36, Mf3. Contents: Avestâ alphabet; Nyâishes 1-3. 5; Mayâ Zôhar (= Mayâ Yasht in Mf3); the five Gâhs; Yasht 1. 3. 11. 11a (Y. 57 written out in full); the Âfrîngâns Dahmân, Srôsh, Gahanbâr, panjak Gâs, Rapithwin.

W2 (old No. 4), modern transcript of various Yashts, made for John Wilson, 394 foll., $7^{1}/_{8} : 4^{5}/_{16}$ in., probably from the same copyist as K40. Contents: Yasht 1. 3. 5 (Avân Yasht). 12. 11a. 13.

W3 (old No. 5), Khorda Avestâ, 293 foll., $5^{7}/_{8} : 3^{7}/_{8}$ in., on blue paper, without date, according to the colophon copied by Mobed Bêzan Rustam in Surat. The Ms. appears to have been transcribed from an Iranian one, the style is true Iranian. Contents: the two Sîrôzas; the Âfrîngâns Dahmân, Gahanbâr, Gâthâ, Rapithwin; lesser Âfrîngâns; the Nyâishes Khurshêd, Mihir, Mâh, Âtash and Âvā yazaṭ Nyâish (begins with the words: [illegible]; this is the beginning of the Mayâ Yasht in Mf3); Yasht 13 (foll. 187-291).

W5 (old No. 7), Khorda Avestâ, modern copy. Contents: Khurshêd, Mihir, Mâh Nyâishes, Âtash Behrâm Ny., Abân Ardvî Sûr Ny.; the fragment Vispa Humata.

W6 (old No. 8), Khorda Avestâ, modern copy, contains the two Sîrôzas, Srôsh Yasht Hâdhôkht and two Âçirvâdas in Pâzand and Bhâshâ.

Most of the manuscripts, irrespective of the corrections of the copyists themselves, are corrected by a second, and sometimes by a third hand. The distinction between manuscripts of Iranian and of Indian origin is important. The Iranian manuscripts are easily recognized by the characteristic features of the script and by the uniformly well-marked letters with heavy horizontal and light vertical strokes. The Indian writing varies considerably according to the scribe and the time.

The classification of the manuscripts may best be begun with the Vendidâd, for in this the relationship of the manuscripts is simplest and clearest. The manuscripts with Pahlavî translation are to be taken as the basis. This class of manuscripts is represented by K1-L4. I have not succeeded in finding, even in transcripts, the trace of a third cognate ancestral manuscript of the Pahlavi

[1] In the edition the readings of these Mss. have all been taken from Westergaard; a renewed collation would yield a number of corrections; as an example, W2 at Yt. 5,7 reads not [illegible] but [illegible], the reading therefore attested by the Mss. is [illegible].

Vendidâd. Anquetil's statement (i, 2 p. 4) that all extant Pahlavi Vendidâds come from two copies has so far been substantiated.

Unfortunately both manuscripts are incomplete. Only a little over half of L4 has been preserved, and about three quarters of K1, and if the part that now can no longer be used be deducted, K1 is almost reduced to a third. Only from Chap. 9, or rather from 18,71, are both manuscripts comparable. There are extant, however, copies of the complete manuscripts, and these serve as a tolerable substitute for the missing parts. The descendants of K1 are numerous; to these in the first rank belong Ml3, B1, M3, P2 and the two fragments K3a and K3b.

The mutual relationship between these manuscripts will become clear from the following details.

(1) Ml3, B1, P2 (pr. m.), M3 have characteristic mistakes and peculiarities in common with K1, thus the numerous omissions, e. g.:

19,11 ([illegible] to [illegible]); 14,13 ([illegible]), 10,34 ([illegible]), 19,24 [illegible] to [illegible], 19,14 ([illegible]), 18,75 ([illegible]) et al. All four read with K1: [illegible][1] 8,53, [illegible] 9,14, [illegible] 8,9, [illegible] 14,12, [illegible] 15,26, [illegible] 18,96, [illegible] [illegible] (instead of [illegible] [illegible] 9,32, [illegible] instead of [illegible] 13,42, [illegible] instead of [illegible] [illegible] 18,12. All omit [illegible] in 6,1, [illegible] in 9,31, and in 7,75 give the words [illegible] [illegible] in reverse order, all have the bad blunder in 8,5.

(2) Ml3, B1, P2 (pr. m.), M3 have a series of mistakes in common which K1 does not share:

	Ml3. B1. P2. M3:	K1
13,47	[illegible]	[illegible]
6,31	[illegible]	[illegible]
8,4	[illegible]	[illegible]
7,13	[illegible]	[illegible]
7,41	[illegible]	[illegible]
13,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
8,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
13,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
17,1	[illegible]	[illegible]
13,45	[illegible]	[illegible]
7,[illegible]	[illegible] [illegible] (P2 [illegible] [illegible])	[illegible]

	Ml3. B1. P2. M3:	K1:
8,58	[illegible] [illegible]	[illegible] [illegible]
6,18	[illegible]	[illegible]
8,46	[illegible]	[illegible] [illegible]
14,15	[illegible]	[illegible]
9,14	[illegible]	[illegible]
15,24	[illegible]	[illegible] (and above it [illegible] added).

In all four is wanting in 16,2 the sentence [illegible] to [illegible], in 13,51 [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible], in 15,14 [illegible],[1] the last [illegible] in 8,58, [illegible] in 8,106, [illegible] in 15,50, [illegible] in 9,42, while in K1 all is in good order. The sentences of 9,17–24 are in Ml3 etc. in great disorder, in K1 quite correct.

K1 reads at 5,59

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Ml3, B1, M3, P2 make out of this

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

In 15,24 K1: [illegible] [illegible]

All four have: [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Now since Ml3 is undoubtedly the oldest of these four manuscripts, it is the source of these errors and at the same time the mother of the three others.

Conjecturally also in the following cases the blunder first crept into the text through Ml3, though the control by means of K1 is here wanting Ml3, B1, P2, M3 read 3,7 [illegible], 9,29 [illegible] (K1 defective).

Still other cases in the first chapters where all four agree in a mistake, are the following:

1,20 the two words [illegible] [illegible] are missing; 2,21 the first [illegible] [illegible] is wanting, and the second time instead of it there stands [illegible], 4,18 all read [illegible] for [illegible]

(3) B1, P2, M3 show corresponding variations from Ml3 (K1). The readings are:

	B1. P2 (pr. m.). M3:	Ml3:	K1:
19,6	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
19,5	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible] ([illegible] struck out sec. m.)
7,34	[illegible]	[illegible]
8,100	[illegible]	[illegible]	defective
8,10	[illegible][2]	[illegible]
5,27	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

---

[1] As may be inferred from Pt2, this was probably the reading also in L4.

[1] Wanting also pr. m. in L4!

[2] P2 from the very first hand [illegible] and [illegible] then corrected to [illegible], M3 more exactly [illegible]

	Bı. Pa (pr. m.). M3:	Ml3:	K1:
3,14	[illegible]	[illegible]	vacat
6,33	[illegible]	[illegible]
6,27	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
8,96	[illegible]	[illegible]	defective
13,16	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
5,8	[illegible]	[illegible]	vacat
11,10	[illegible]	[illegible]
1,17	[illegible][1]	deest	vacat

Bı, M3, Pa (pr. m.) omit Par. 4,51, but in Ml3 it stands complete.[2] 2,31 in Ml3 only [illegible] is wanting, not [illegible]; in Bı, M3, Pa [illegible] [illegible] are wanting. At 19,31 in K1, Ml3 only the three words [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] are wanting, in Bı, M3, Pa all the rest of the paragraph also. Vd. 8,22 is correspondingly abbreviated in Bı, M3, Pa, but in Ml3, K1 written out in full. In 3,42 before [illegible] the three insert a [illegible] which is wanting in Ml3. At 3,19 in Ml3 the four words [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] of the following sentence have fallen out, Bı, Pa, M3 agree in having of the missing words pr. m. only [illegible] [illegible]

All three must therefore have a common source of errors.

(4) Pa and M3 stand together in closer relation and in opposition to Bı, Ml3 etc.:

	Pa. M3:	Bı. Ml3:
4,47	[illegible]	[illegible]
3,33	[illegible]	[illegible]
3,20	[illegible]	[illegible]
8,34	[illegible]	[illegible]
3,42	[illegible] [illegible] [illegible]	[illegible] [illegible]

In both there are wanting at 5,9 the words [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] which are found in Ml3, Bı.[3]

Pa, M3 accordingly stand in a dependent relation to Bı, but are reciprocally co-ordinated. M3 cannot have been transcribed from Pa, otherwise in 7,44, for example, the descent of the reading would be:

[illegible] K1
[illegible] Ml3
[illegible] Bı
[illegible] Pa (pr. m.)
[illegible] M3.

Nor can Pa, on the other hand, spring from M3, for that would give at 7,35, for example, the unnatural sequence:

[illegible] K1
[illegible] Ml3. Bı
[illegible] M3
[1] [illegible] Pa (pr. m.).

Furthermore, M3 cannot have been directly transcribed from Bı, for the copyist of M3 must have found a gap or an illegible passage at 5,52 in the manuscript before him, while in Bı the passage appears to be quite in order. Nothing remains for us but to assume a missing link between Bı on the one side, and Pa, M3 on the other, from which Pa and M3 descend. Such a link is presupposed also by the Vendidâd fragment K3a. The two fragments K3a and K3b by no means stand on the same plane. K3b is a correct copy of Ml3 or Bı,[2] but K3a agrees with M3, Pa in the following important points:

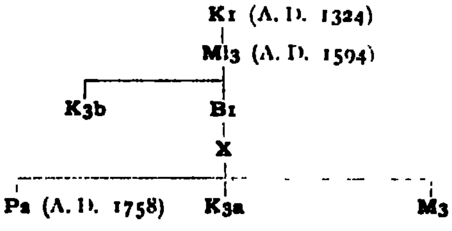
	K3a. M3. Pa:	Bı:
1,14	[illegible]	[illegible] (pr. m.)
2,5	[illegible]	[illegible]
2,30	[illegible]	[illegible]

2,18 Bı has [illegible], M3, Pa [illegible], K3a [illegible]. Finally it is especially to be emphasized that K3a, M3, Pa in unusual manner agree in abbreviating the passage 2,29, namely [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] etc., while Ml3, Bı write the whole paragraph out in full.

For the descent of K1 the following genealogy may therefore be set down:



---

[1] In Bı and Pa added sec. m. as correction.

[2] Pa has the entire paragraph sec. m. in marg. This is to be inserted in the notes to the passage.

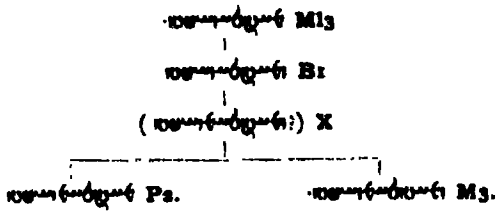
[3] Whether the sentence which is omitted by Pa, M3 in 4,44, [illegible] to [illegible], but which stands in Ml3, was already wanting in Bı, is uncertain, for just here there is a rather large gap in Bı.

[1] Above this sec. m. [illegible]. All other facts contradict the assumption that the copyist of M3 made use of the corrections in Pa.

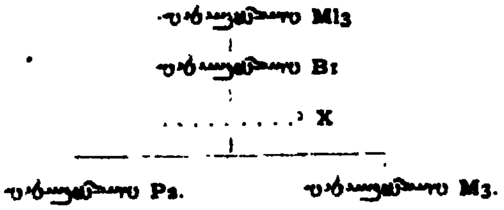
[2] This cannot accurately be decided as the extent of the fragment is too small, and, besides, in Bı the beginning of the Vendîdâd, as far as 1,6, is by a second hand. The greater probability, however, is in favor of the descent from Ml3. In Ml3 as in K3b at 1,17 [illegible] is altogether wanting, while Bı has [illegible] (so M3, [illegible] Pa sec. m., K3a) from a later hand. Vd. 2,8 in Ml3, K3b [illegible] is wanting, in Bı [illegible] stands pr. m

This scheme may be further illustrated by some specimens:

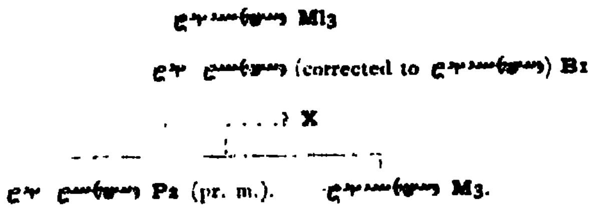
4,1 (K1 vacat)



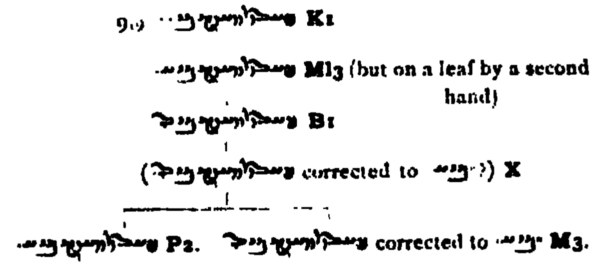
10,19 (K1 defective)



8,60 the second time (K1 defective)



9,9



Among all the complete manuscripts above described, P2 appears to be the least accurate copy of the original. The Vulgate has oftener crept in; in other places, however, it looks as if the copyist had occasionally compared Ml3, or that X in some places had been collated with Ml3 and corrected accordingly. Thus at times agree:

	Ml3 and P2 in opposition to:	B1 and M3:
8,75	[illegible] (for [illegible])	[illegible]
15,2	[illegible] (from the P.V.)	[illegible]
15,49	[illegible][1]	[illegible]

	Ml3 and P2 in opposition to:	B1 and M3:
14,10	[illegible]	[illegible]
14,9	[illegible]	[illegible]
15,49	[illegible]	[illegible]

16,6 Ml3 has [illegible] and [illegible] corrected pr. m. to [illegible], P2 [illegible], B1 [illegible];[1] 15,44 B1 and M3 have [illegible], but P2 with Ml3 and K1 [illegible]; 15,49 Ml3 and P2 pr. m. [illegible], B1 [illegible];[1] 10,14 the second [illegible] as far as [illegible] stands in B1 and in M3, but is wanting in Ml3 and originally in P2; the same is true of [illegible] in 11,3. Quite peculiar is the following case: 14,18 Ml3 originally has [illegible] (instead of [illegible]), but [illegible] corrected apparently pr. m. to [illegible] and [illegible] added above the line as correction, B1, M3 read [illegible], but P2 pr. m. [illegible]. Also the scribe of B1 appears sometimes to have recurred to K1.[2] 19,5 the clause [illegible] as far as [illegible] is wanting in Ml3; K1 has for [illegible] the reading [illegible], B1 has the clause again restored and in fact with the reading [illegible] (so also M3, P2).

This will be still plainer if the Pahlavî Vendîdâd of Dastur Jamaspji, which according to him is descended from the Teheran Ms., be also compared.[3]

With P2 is connected K2 the well-known revision of the Vendîdâd text which Dastur Darab prepared at the instigation of Dastur Jamasp.[4] This is much influenced by the Vulgate and is of no value for text criticism. A peculiar composite, finally, is the Ms. P10, which according to Anquetil should be a transcript of the copy of Dastur Jamasp. The basis of this Ms is not a Ms. of the K1 series nor of the L4 line, but it has taken its readings from both alike.

The following readings, for example, point to L4: [illegible] 3,18, [illegible] 3,41, [illegible] 9,21, [illegible] 8,4, the transposition of both sentences beginning with [illegible] 8,74; conversely, the following point to K1 etc.: [illegible] 9,29, the corruption in 8,33, [illegible] 18,26, [illegible] 9,31, the omissions in 10,1; 9,9 etc.—The confusion in Chaps. 3 and 18, most of the omissions as in 7,75; 19,41 seq.; 19,45; 16,16, 15,8; 3,32.33 have remained, other gaps are filled up, e.g. in 15,5; 14,1; 13,38. The extensive abbreviations and abridgments of K1 in 8,82 seq. are cleared away by the aid of the Vendîdâd sâda.

[1] Possibly [illegible] in P2 has been removed by erasure.

[1] From M3 I have noted nothing.

[2] The corresponding omission of the three Avestâ words at 4,43 in Ml3, P2, M3 opposed to B1 does not come into consideration, because in B1 as in Ml3 the entire passage is due to a younger hand. B1, however, has instead of the P.V. a half line blank.

[3] According to a communication from West who has a copy of the colophon, this Ms. bears the date of the year 1767 and appears to be a further independent copy of Ml3.

[4] Anquetil I, I p. 326.

[5] This, however, is also the Vulgate.

On account of its eclectic character the Ms. has no critical value. It is interesting because of several rare or uncommon readings, e. g. [illegible] 4,49; [illegible] 16,12.

As the only direct transcript of the complete codex K1 there remains, therefore, Ml3. If Ml3 be minutely compared with the part extant of K1, one soon becomes convinced that Ml3, taken for all in all, is a carefully prepared copy. The copyist, to be sure, has now and then absolutely misread or has wrongly transcribed, besides making small blunders. The text of Fargards 1. 2. 5 and of the close of 4, therefore, as based in the first place upon Ml3, cannot lay claim to the same degree of certainty as that of the other Fargards based upon K1 or L4.

More scanty is the substitute material for the missing parts of L4. A complete transcript of L4, or from the L4 line, is Pt2. The following exact correspondences of L4 and Pt2 prove this:

	L4. Pt2:	K1 (Ml3):
3,41	[illegible]	[illegible]
18,70	[illegible]	[illegible]
18,76	[illegible]	[illegible]
19,28	[illegible]	[illegible]
19,34	[illegible]	[illegible]
14,8	[illegible]	[illegible]
14,9	[illegible]	[illegible]
15,12	[illegible]	[illegible]
15,17	[illegible]	[illegible]
16,7	[illegible]	[illegible]
18,34	[illegible]	[illegible]
14,5	[illegible]	[illegible]
14,7	[illegible]	[illegible]
13,32	[illegible]	[illegible]
19,5	[illegible]	[illegible]
22,3	[illegible], [illegible]	[illegible]
18,46	[illegible]	[illegible]
17,2	[illegible]	[illegible]
15,13	[illegible]	[illegible]
13,39	[illegible]	[illegible]

L4 and Pt2 conform in having a [illegible] added as correction over [illegible] at 15,12; L4 at 3,31 has [illegible] instead of [illegible], but [illegible] corrected to [illegible]; Pt2 corresponding to this has [illegible]. In both Mss. [illegible] is wanting in 16,8, and [illegible] in 16,12.

Secondly, the numerous corrections of P2 come into consideration. According to Anquetil's authority the copy of Darab had been collated with a Vendîdâd of Dastur Bikh (Bhîkhâ) in Surat. The value of this collation was first recognized by Spiegel. While P2 is descended from the K1 line, the Ms. of Bikh belonged to the L4 line. A few examples will suffice:

	P2:	corrected to:	K1:	L4:
19,28	[illegible]:	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
13,17	[illegible]:	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
13,18	[illegible]:	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
19,4	[illegible]:	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

Or where L4 is defective the corrections agree with Pt2: 7,4 [illegible] is corrected to [illegible], K1 [illegible], Pt2 [illegible]; 4,17 Pt2 and P2 (corr.) have [illegible], Ml3 [illegible].

The corrections, as far as I have compared them, are pretty exact, but they are not complete, and sometimes other corrections slip in. Westergaard (Pref. p. 5) has doubts as to Dastur Bikh's copy having been L4 itself; my own investigations fully corroborate his view. Between L4 on the one hand and Pt2,[1] as well as the corrections in P2, on the other, we must assume an intermediate link (Y).

At 9,14 L4 still reads rightly [illegible], P2 has [illegible] corrected to [illegible], Pt2 has [illegible]. This reading accordingly crept from the Vulgate into the copy (Y) upon which Pt2 and P2 (corr.) are based. 19,13 L4 and P2 have [illegible], the latter has [illegible] added as correction between [illegible] and [illegible]; Pt2: [illegible]. 14,5 L4 has [illegible], Pt2 [illegible], P2 [illegible] as correction.

Thirdly, the modern supplements of L4 come into consideration. When the Ms. was sold to Guise the first 152 leaves had not yet been lost, but according to an extant note, they were in wretched condition with the exception of foll. 33-56. Instead of most carefully preserving what was extant, the collector knew no better than to have these pages transcribed by a Dastur[2] "from another copy." Whether or not the copyist made use of the leaves now lost, or whether he confined himself to the other copy, he showed tact at any rate in employing a Ms. of the L4 series. L4a, as I designate these supplements, exhibits the latter type throughout, and in the decisive variations it agrees with Pt2, P2 (sec. m.), eventually also with P10. Examples:

[1] Pt2 is younger than P2 and also certainly younger than the collation with the Ms. of Bikh.

[2] In fact there were two, as may be inferred from the handwriting.

1,1 [illegible] L4a. Pt2. P10, ib. [illegible] L4a. Pt2; 1,6 [illegible] L4a Pt2. P10; 5,38 [illegible] L4a. Pt2; 6,29 [illegible] L4a. Pt2. P2 (corrected) (K1 [illegible]); 6,30 [illegible] L4a. Pt2. P2 (corr.). P10 (K1 [illegible]), 7,24 and 27 [illegible] L4a. Pt2. P2 (corr.) (P10 [illegible], but K1 [illegible]), 4,17 [illegible] L4a. Pt2. P10; 5,59 [illegible] L4a. Pt2. P2 (corr.). P10; 8,10 [illegible] L4a. Pt2 P2 (corr.). P10, 8,4 [illegible] L4a. Pt2 P10.

On the other hand, the pieces of paper pasted over the old text of L4 and written sec. m., are for the most part worthless. The repairers of the Mss. were accustomed to paste such patches on before they were written upon, and then the words were supplied from a modern copy. These patches can in part be easily loosened, and underneath can be seen the old reading which is often quite different. Many important variants have in this way been obtained, e. g. [illegible] in 13,35.

Finally, to this line also belongs the modern copy Jb (Avestâ text with Pahlavi and Gujarati translation)[1] used in the first chapters. The only complete copy of L4 that comes seriously into consideration is Pt2. But since Pt2 cannot be directly transcribed from L4 and has already been much influenced by the Vulgate, it stands after Ml3 in merit and reliability. The small gaps in L4 are frequently supplied by Pt2 after the Vulgate,[2] e. g. 3,32.33.35; 13,20.47.48; 14,1, 15,13; 16,8. Other gaps the copyist has allowed to stand, e. g. 15,18; 17,8, especially the large ones in 19,41 seq. and the confusion in chapters 3 and 18.

I now come to the two old Pahlavi Vendidâds K1 and L4. According to the statement of the colophons in K1, the history of its text can be traced back some distance. K1 was written by Mitrô-âpân i Kai-Khûsrôb in Cambay (finished May 17, 1324) and copied in fact from the Ms. of Rûstakhm i Mitrô-âpân. This Ms. of Rustam was written after Rustam's arrival in India, therefore after 1269, in which year he copied the Ardâ-Vîrâf Nâmak in Iran.[3] Mitrô-âpân, furthermore, recopied before the colophon of Rustam a still older colophon from his predecessor. This is dated May 10, 1205 and it notes that Aêrdashîr î Vohûman made a transcript from the Ms. of Hômâst in Seistan, and that he intended this as a present for Mâhyâr î Mâh-Mitrô, a priest of Aûcak (Uchh in Punjab), who for six years had studied holy science with the priests of Seistan.—From this it is to be inferred that Mâhyâr returned to India with Aêrdashîr's Ms. of the Pahlavi Vendidâd, ca. 1205, and that the Ms. of Rustam was copied ca. 1270. From this unknown Rustam Ms. descend the two lines of the Pahlavi Vendidâd, at the head of which lines stand K1 and L4.[1]

All doubt as to the fact that L4 is a second transcript of the Rustam manuscript,[2] co-ordinate with K1, is removed by the colophon of L4, copied in full in Pt2, which carries more weight than a whole page of original mistakes common to K1 and L4.[3] Upon the basis of this almost undoubted fact we may form a sure judgment in regard to Mitrô-âpân as a copyist. Although the two manuscripts often show striking agreements in readings which are as good as they are peculiar, nevertheless the two tend constantly to diverge from each other. Differences of the following kind are frequent:

[1] Here also are found the readings: [illegible] 1,1; [illegible] ib.; [illegible] 1,6; [illegible] 4,17.

[2] In this respect the copyist shows the influence of the revision of the text made at Jamasp's instigation.

[3] This is to be inferred from the mention of a Nîshâpûr Ms. in the colophon to the Ardâ-Vîrâf and Gôsht-i Fryânô (ed. West p. 266).

[1] Tradition still knew of this Dastur Aêrdashîr of Seistan in Anquetil's day (cf. i, 1 p. 323; 2 p. 4). According to this tradition the Dastur Aêrdashîr himself had brought the Ms. from Seistan to India about four hundred years before Anquetil. Two copies were there made of Aêrdashîr's Ms. and from these descended all Pahlavi Vendîdâds in Gujarat. According to this, it must be assumed that Rustam had prepared two transcripts of the Aêrdashîr Ms. and provided them with identical colophons, and that Mitrô-âpân had copied both of these. Against this, first of all speaks the identity in the day of the month (day Spendarmad of the month Fravardîn) in both Rustam colophons in K1 as well as in Pt2. The year is omitted in both. The tradition which makes a mistake of one hundred and fifty years may easily have entirely forgotten the one copy of Rustam lying between L4-K1 and the Aêrdashîr manuscript.

[2] So Westergaard (Pref. p. 3) already conjectured.

[3] Omissions in common of entire paragraphs, clauses, and of several words occur in 9,46; 13,8.48, 15,8.22; 16,14; 17,8; 18,6, 19,23.41 seq. 45, 20,7, 22,8.9 etc. (at 20,6 L4 omits one word more than K1); of single words in 9,43-53; 13,16.45.51, 15,42; 16,2; 17,6, 18,13.20.31.65; 19,20.30.41; 20,2, 21,4, 22,1 etc. Striking dittographies are found in both at 13,2.39, 19,21, identical insertions 9,52; 13,18; 18,63. The evident corruptions in 9,34; 15,43 are alike in both. Also the great confusion in Farg. 18 arising from the misplacement of leaves, and the slighter confusion in Chap. 3, by which Parr. 29-32 (half) are inserted before 26, existed already in the text that Mitrô-âpân made use of.

i. e. variants with at least two points of difference. In $19,_{5}$ out of 33 words 22 agree, 11 are differently represented; in $18,_{32}$ the relation is 7 : 5, in $21,_{4}$ as 15 : 9. In 20,6 in the case of the peculiar names for diseases, only one has been kept the same; five of them differ. Each of the two Mss., moreover, has a large number of special omissions of its own: K1 in $9,_{9.16}$; $10,_{1}$; $15,_{3}$; $16,_{14}$; $18,_{36}$; $19,_{24.34}$; $22,_{4}$; L4 in $14,_{3.5}$; $15,_{13}$; $16,_{8}$; $18,_{4.42}$; $19,_{20}$; $20,_{4}$; $21,_{7.12}$; $22,_{4.19}$.[1]

After all, Mitrô-âpân cannot be counted among the accurate scribes. This disadvantage offsets in large measure the advantage which he possesses in being the oldest source of the most important Avestâ texts. It is only where both Mss. agree that the reading may be looked upon as well established, so far as other considerations do not speak against it; a single one of the two Mss. is alone not a positive authority. Mitrô-âpân requires a very careful control by means of another class of manuscripts.

The second class is composed of the Mss. of the so-called Vendîdâd sâda, in which the Yasna, Vispered and Vendîdâd are all combined, without the Pahlavî translation, into a single book for liturgical use.[1] Among the great mass of Vendîdâd sâda Mss., the Persian ones are distinguished by differences so marked that Westergaard even set up two distinct classes, namely, the Indian Vendîdâd sâdas and those from Persia.

The arrangement of the texts in all Mss. of the Vendîdâd sâda, including the Persian, is the same. In the case of repetitions, while the Pahlavî Vendîdâd prefers abbreviating or abridging, the Vendîdâd sâda, especially in the Vendîdâd, avoids this; the text is given by the latter almost always in extenso. In general, in the case of greater divergences, the text of the Vendîdâd sâdas is the fuller, that of the Pahlavî Vendîdâds is the more brief.

By no means rare is the case where all the Vendîdâd sâdas agree in a majority of single words or clauses as opposed to a minority in the Pahlavî Vendîdâd. In the case of the single Vendîdâd sâda Mss. differences arising from omissions or additions are very rare. All Mss. of the Vendîdâd sâda ultimately presuppose a common archetype. There seems to me to be no doubt that this archetype in turn was excerpted and compiled from the Pahlavî Avestâ Mss. We can hardly conceive of the Vendîdâd of the Sassanians without the Pahlavi translation. As a direct proof of this may be instanced numerous Avestâ glosses of the Pahlavî translation which have crept into the Avestâ text of the Vendîdâd sâda. In separating the Avestâ text from its Pahlavî setting several mistakes may have been made by the compiler of the Vendîdâd sâda, namely in cases where the text was abridged and he tried to give it complete. Our Pahlavî Vendidâds often leave us in the dark as to the extent of an abridgment, for they forget to give the catchword after the sign of abbreviation ℨı (vad "as far as").

[1] For this reason, if for no other, the somewhat younger Ms. K1 cannot have been copied from L4.

[1] The Yasna forms the basis of the Vendîdâd sâda. In the first part of the Yasna the chapters of the Vispered alone are intermingled, and in that case they are either inserted in the Yasna chapter or they are added at the end. After Chap. 27, i. e. from the beginning of the Gâthâs, the Vendîdâd also is inserted as well as the Vispered, four Fargards at first and then regularly two. With Yasna 55, i. e. at the end of the Staota Yesnya, all insertions absolutely cease and the Yasna alone is recited to the end.

At all events, however, the assumed archetype of the Vendîdâd sâdas lies farther back than our oldest Pahlavi Vendidâds in point of time, or before the Ms. of Rustam. Its independence of the latter is proved by a series of diverging readings which all the Vendidâd sâdas, including the Persian (Mfa. Jp1), have adhered to as a common class sign. 13,25	[illegible]	[illegible] [2] (L4)

Between the two groups of the Vendidâd sâdas there are often only minor orthographical differences. Thus:

	the Indian Vd. sâdas:	Mfa. Jp1:	the Mss. with P.V
8,6	([illegible]) [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible] (K1)
14,9	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible] (L4. Ml3)
2,40	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible] (Ml3. Pt2)
14,15	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible] (L4. K1)

5,44 and everywhere
	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
8,10	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible] (K1. Pt2)

On the contrary, the Persian group stands no less often in opposition to the Indian and in most exact and significant accord with the Pahlavi Vendîdâds. Here are a few examples:

	the Indian Vd. sâdas:	Mfa. Jp1:	the Pahlavi Vendîdâds:

8,75	addunt [illegible]	[illegible] deest
8,19	addunt [illegible]	[illegible] deest.

Sometimes all three classes go a different way:

16,8	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
17,1	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
16,14	([illegible]) [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
14,9	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

These few examples are sufficient of themselves to lead to the conjecture that all the Indian Vendidâd sâdas have come ultimately from a common source, from one ancestral manuscript, younger and specifically Indian. Other constant variants of a quite uncommon character, such as [illegible] in 13,11 for [illegible]; [illegible] 3,8 for [illegible]; [illegible] 2,12 for [illegible], which can be explained only from a single accidental misreading, render this assumption indisputable.

[1] The mistake in K1, L4 is occasioned by the falling out of the preceding [illegible]

[2] So also Dh1, but in this probably an accidental slip.

[3] Except O2. B2.

The Indian Vendîdâd sâdas represent the Vulgate of the three books mentioned. Their value from the critical standpoint has not been highly esteemed from the outset in Europe. It must be remarked, however, that the Paris Ms. P1 which was the first made generally accessible is among the very worst Mss. of all. Practical necessity may have called forth many such copies in India. The material that I made use of was but a fragment of what exists. I must refrain therefore from setting up a genealogical tree. But very few of these Mss. are dated before last century. So much only may be said, that the Indian Mss. of the Vendîdâd sâda known to me, fall into two groups, a better group, represented by Br1, L2, K10 (all three written in the preceding century), and an inferior set, represented by L1, M2, O2, B2, P1. The Ms. Dh1 holds an intermediate position.[1] I shall first give a number of Shibboleths for testing connection with this or with that family.[2] Thus:

14,9 [illegible] L1 B2. O2. M2. Dh1— [illegible] L2. Br1. K10.
20,4 [illegible] L1. M2— [illegible] L2. Br1. K10.

8,8 [illegible] L1; [illegible] M2; [illegible] O2. B2- [illegible] L2. Br1. K10.
13,30 [illegible] after [illegible] L1. M2- wanting L2. Br1.
7,39 [illegible] L1. M2. O2. B2. P1— [illegible] L2. Br1. K10.
19,7 [illegible] L1. O2. M2— [illegible] Br1. L2. K10.
5,9 [illegible] L1. O2. B2. M2— [illegible] L2.
7,22 [illegible] L1. O2 M2- [illegible] L2.
7,25 [illegible] L1. O2. B2. M2- [illegible] Br1. L2.
19,4 [illegible] L1. M2. P1— [illegible] Br1. L2. K10.

In 17,2 after [illegible] the [illegible] is wanting in Br1. L2. K10, but stands in L1. O2. M2. Dh1.

In the group represented by Br1, L2, K10 the text is generally more carefully handed down than in the other. The latter in its younger members more especially represents the Vulgate. The Mss. Br1, L2 are probably copied directly from the same original, whereas K10 stands a step farther removed.[3] The London Ms., L2, which is some years younger than Br1, cannot be transcribed from the latter, as it sometimes has preserved the correct old reading, whereas in Br1 the modern Vulgate has intruded itself. At 6,27 L2 rightly reads [illegible], Br1 with the Vulgate [illegible]; likewise in 2,32 [illegible], Br1 again [illegible] [illegible]. At times only a single manuscript of this group has the old reading or that which corresponds with the other group; thus K10 [illegible] in 16,7; Br1 [illegible] in 14,10; [illegible] in 5,4.7 (but not 8,34); [illegible] in 6,27. Br1 may be regarded in general as taking the precedence among all the Indian Vendîdâd sâdas that I have seen.

The position of L1 in the other group is instructive. Although the date at the end, placing L1 in the fifteenth century, is not genuine, this Ms. is nevertheless certainly considerably older than the other Indian Mss. of the kind. This explains why, in spite of its decided relationship to the inferior group, L1 nevertheless in certain cases stands opposed to M2, O2, B2 etc. and harmonizes with a Ms. of the other group. Thus:

[1] M2, however, has several peculiar readings also, e.g. [illegible] 14,12.

[2] My memoranda are not always complete which can hardly be found fault with considering the great extent of these Mss. Therefore where all the Mss. are not cited, my notes contain no memorandum.

[1] M2 has [illegible] corrected sec. m. to [illegible]

[2] Thus agreeing with K1, but against Mf2. Jp1.

[3] L2. Br1 read e. g. 13,46 [illegible], K10 [illegible]

9,39 [illegible] L1.2, but [illegible] Br1. K10. M2. P1; [illegible] O2.

18,65 [illegible] L1.2, but [illegible] Br1. M2. O2. B2. Dh1.

Often L1 alone agrees with the other class or resembles it in opposition to the other Indian Vendîdâd sâdas:

19,30	[illegible] L1.4. K1. Jp1. Mf2.	[illegible] Br1. L2. K10. M2. P1.
15,14	[illegible] L1. Jp1.	[illegible] L2. Br1. M2. O2. B2. P1.
7,79	[illegible] L1. Jp1. Mf2. K1.	[illegible] L2. Br1. K10. M2. O2. B2. P1.
19,15	[illegible] L1. Jp1. Mf2.	[illegible] Br1. L2. K10. Dh1. M2. O2. P1.
16,7	[illegible] K1; [illegible] Mf2; [illegible] L1.	[illegible] Br1. L2. K10. Dh1. [illegible] M2 (but [illegible] sec. m.); [illegible] O2 B2. P1.

From the last examples we can see how an old reading at some point of time may disappear and that, too, everywhere, without regard to the line of descent. This disappearance from all must have some common cause: this is, the intrusion of the more corrupt oral text into the written transmission.

From the last of the above lists it is evident that M2 stands upon an older stage in the L1 group than do O2, B2, P1. Likewise in 13,45 M2 reads with L1 [illegible] [illegible], while B2, O2, P1 agree in having the corruption [illegible]. Of the three latter manuscripts B2 and P1 stand in closer connection with each other. They are both copies of a manuscript into which, as I conjecture, corrections from L4 or K1 had been inserted.[1] Especially striking readings from B2-P1 are:

[illegible] in 19,26 (against [illegible] of the other Vd. sâdas); [illegible] [illegible] 19,28 ([illegible] for [illegible] otherwise only in L4. K1); [illegible] 19,43 (instead of [illegible]); [illegible] 19,30 (for [illegible]); [illegible] ib; both have like omissions, e. g. of the words [illegible] to [illegible] in 13,39.

As to the date when the ancestral manuscript of all the Indian Vendîdâd sâdas was brought to India we have no definite information. It may, however, be shown without much difficulty that already in the first half of the fourteenth century the Vulgate text was in existence in India. Herbad Mitrô-âpân is by no means rarely led astray by the Vulgate. Thus at 21,2 in L4 he writes [illegible] against K1 and all the Persian Vendîdâd sâdas, but with the Indian ones collectively. A very marked case is 8,97. There instead of [illegible] he writes in K1 at first [illegible] and then [illegible] over it as correction. This extraneous [illegible] is again met in the L1 group, in fact in L1, M2, B2, P1.

A problem, indeed, is furnished by the third class of manuscripts, the Persian Vendîdâd sâdas. This class is represented in Westergaard by K9; but for Vd. 1-9 he had also at his disposal collations and a transcript of its original Mf2 (designated by him as R). The Ms. K9, written in Surat A.D. 1746, is a very true copy, to be sure, of Mf2. But apart from small blunders its value is materially impaired by the fact that, according to a habit of copyists, the corrections by a second hand are often copied instead of the original readings.[1] It was my good fortune not only to be able to compare the valuable manuscript of the Mulla Firuz Library, but also, thanks to the efforts of Dastur Jamaspji, to have sent to me in Jp1 an equally valuable fellow-countryman of Mf2, which also gives some information regarding the age of this class. Mf2 was copied in 1618 by Khûsrôb who does not mention his source. The history of the Ms. Jp1, which is about twenty years younger (see above), can with the help of the colophon be followed back to the third member, namely to Shatrô-êyâr Êrdashîr, for which copyist the year 1516 is elsewhere attested.

The agreement between Mf2 and Jp1 is most striking. Both these manuscripts accord with each other almost regularly in omissions, mistakes, original readings, and in the many additions and repetitions which are characteristic of this class.[2] Whether both are copied from the Ms.

[1] 18,79 P1 reads with L4 [illegible] against K1. The corrections were accordingly taken from the L4 series. From B2 I have nothing noted for this passage.

[1] Westergaard, Pref. p. 9 n. 3 cites four cases where K9 agrees with the Vulgate. Two of these rest upon later corrections in Mf2. 7,39 Mf2 has [illegible] and sec. m. [illegible] added as correction, in 11,10 [illegible] likewise corrected to [illegible].

[2] Omissions in common to both are found e. g. in 3,18; 8,103; 19,3; 20,6, shorter or longer additions or repetitions in 2,21; 3,18; 5,28 seq.; 6,46; 8,10, 8,81 seq.; 9,25; 13,32.49; 15,20; 16,15; 18,16.26; 19,14; 20,6; 22,3 seq. Rare mistakes, e. g. [illegible]—[illegible] 9,14; [illegible] 8,34; [illegible] 7,25; [illegible]—[illegible] 14,17; [illegible] of Marzapân, or whether they are copied from a separate original, is a question that can only be answered with the aid of K4 and must therefore be reserved for the Yasna. The text of both Mss. is in part still more full than that in the Indian Vendîdâd sâdas, in which respect undoubtedly too much has been done on the side of generosity. On the other hand the text is almost entirely free from the embarrassing glosses. A glance is sufficient to show that in details both Mss. give a considerably better text than the Indian Vendîdâd sâdas. The question is whether this is due to their standing so much nearer to the common archetype, or whether we are to assume for Iran a materially better transmission of the Vendidâd sâda than in India.

Their peculiar intermediate position between the Pahlavî Vendidâds on the one hand and the Vendidâd sâdas on the other has already been made clear by the series of examples above. The cases in which they harmonize with this side or agree with that, or where they even go out of their way, would pretty nearly balance. Where L4 and K1 are at odds, Mf2, Jp1 remain wholly neutral, inasmuch as they agree just as often with the one as with the other. Thus the readings:

17,5	[illegible]	K1. Jp1. Mf2	against	[illegible]	L4
19,19	[illegible]	K1. Jp1. Mf2		[illegible]	L4
19,34	[illegible]	K1. Jp1. Mf2		[illegible]	L4
14,9	[illegible]	K1. Jp1. Mf2		[illegible]	L4
4,17	[illegible]	Jp1. Mf2		[illegible]	Pt2. P2 sec. m.
	[illegible]	Ml3
13,50	[illegible]	Jp1. Mf2. K1		[illegible]	L4
but 9,12	[illegible]	Jp1. Mf2. L4	against	[illegible]	K1
22,3	[illegible]	Jp1. Mf2. L4		[illegible]	K1
14,14	[illegible]	Jp1. Mf2. L4		[illegible]	K1
13,28	[illegible]	Jp1. Mf2. L4		[illegible]	K1
9,14	[illegible]	Jp1. L4		[illegible]	K1
	[illegible]	Mf2
16,11	[illegible]	Jp1. Mf2		[illegible]	K1.
	[illegible]	L4

In these readings they represent in 17,5; 19,19; 14,9; 13,50; 9,12; 22,3 the Anti-Vulgate. The comparatively rare cases in which Jp1, Mf2 differ materially from each other are interesting. Their relation is then often analogous to that of K1-L4. Thus in 14,7 Mf2 has [illegible] which agrees rather with [illegible] in K1; Jp1, however, has [illegible], and L4 [illegible] Further readings are:

16,8	[illegible] Jp1. L1.2. Br1. K10. M2. O2. B2.	[illegible] Mf2. K1. L4.
9,17 twice	[illegible] Mf2. L1.2. Br1. M2. O2. B2.	[illegible] Jp1. K1. L4.
8,46.47	[illegible] Mf2. L1.2. Br1;	[illegible] Jp1. K1.10. O2 B2;
	M2 both of these.
5,53	[illegible] Mf2. L1.2. Br1. M2. O2.	[illegible] Jp1. K1.
12,1	[illegible] Mf2; [illegible] L1.2. Br1. M2.	[illegible] Jp1.

From the last examples especially, we can plainly see that there existed also in Iran a Vulgate text, generally inferior, which here and there influenced the copyists. Taking them for all in all I should be inclined to follow the view of Westergaard, that in the Iranian Vendidâd sâdas we have the descendants of a critical revision, or new redaction of the text. This revision was at first an external one. Certain orthographic principles which also the younger copyists in Iran followed, were carried out. Among these I count the preference for [illegible] instead of [illegible], [illegible]; for [illegible], [illegible] instead of [illegible]; for [illegible] at the end instead of [illegible] Sometimes the editor may have allowed himself to be influenced by the Pahlavi translation, e. g. [illegible] in 8,13. In cases, however, where the revision goes deeper we need hardly assume mere arbitrary changes[1] which their author made in accordance with his better knowledge, or because he thought he knew better, but may rather ascribe these to strict adherence to a Pahlavî Avestâ codex now lost.[2] L4, K1 represent the tradition in Seistan, Jp1, Mf2 the old written transmission of Yazd. Both transmissions, however, are still quite close to each other. If it were our task to reconstruct the text of the archetype of the Vendidâd sâdas, an eclectic use of Mf2-Jp1

[illegible] 8,4; [illegible] 11,7. Original readings: [illegible] 19,28; [illegible] 14,8; [illegible] 20,1; [illegible] 8,23; [illegible] 8,13; [illegible] 7,70; [illegible] ib.; [illegible] 6,50; [illegible] 7,75; [illegible] 9,30; [illegible] 9,47; [illegible] 11,9.12; [illegible] 13,38; [illegible] 13,48 etc.

[1] Westergaard Pref. p. 8.

[2] The same holds good of course for the Yasna and Vispered of the same Mss.

would appear from a critical standpoint a very hazardous proceeding; but when we are in search of the best written transmission of the Vendîdâd these two manuscripts are of inestimable value for text criticism.

More extensive in material and at the same time more complicated is the manuscript transmission of the Yasna. Like the Vendidâd, the Yasna has been handed down in a twofold form: first, the text combined with the old commentary; second, the sâda-text with the ritual prescriptions (Nirang or Kiriâ). As to contents both forms of text are exactly alike. The external difference is even less than in the Vendidâd, except so far as the Mss. with the translation give the numerous repetitions by no means rarely in extenso, and on the other hand the sâda-text is by no means sparing of abridgment. Along with the Pahlavi translation we have also, for the greater part of the Yasna, the later Sanskrit translation by Neryosangh The latter, however, is based throughout on the Pahlavi translation; the Sanskrit Yasna Mss., therefore, form only a special group under the first class of manuscripts. The sâda-texts, however, fall into two separate classes, for in this case the regular Yasna sâdas stand over against the Yasna of the Vendidâd sâdas.

Only one manuscript of the Yasna with the Pahlavi translation was accessible to Westergaard, namely, the old Copenhagen Yasna, K5, which he rightly regarded as his best codex. In details, however, he stood in need of a correct standard for testing the trustworthiness of the manuscript. Such a standard is afforded in the first place by the Pahlavi Yasna J2 which is only a few months older. According to the characteristic handwriting and the colophons, both Mss. are by the well-known copyist Mitrô-âpân, the scribe of both old Pahlavi Vendidâds. In K5 the copyist even mentions his source, the Ms. of his great-great-uncle Rûstakhm, scribe of both the Vispereds in Copenhagen and of the original source of K1, L4, who must have prepared the manuscript about 1270.[1] In J2, on the other hand, Mitrô-âpân, contrary to his custom elsewhere, is utterly silent as to his source.[2]

J2 and K5 are two closely related manuscripts. Characteristic mistakes and peculiarities which belong only to these two, are, for example, the following:

31,22	[illegible]	instead of	[illegible]
8,6	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
19,7	[illegible]	"	([illegible]) [illegible]
46,11	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
46,10	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
46,13	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
34,12	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
11,2	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
39,1	[illegible]	"	[illegible] [illegible]
35,9	[illegible]	"	([illegible]) [illegible]
35,10	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
33,7	[illegible]	"	[illegible]

At 28,8 K5 reads [illegible], J2 [illegible]; both insert in 71,9 [illegible]; again in 20,4; 48,5; 53,8; 68,2 both pr. m. omit respectively two, five, four, four words. As to the degree in which the two Mss. are related to each other, and whether J2 is also a copy of the Rustam Ms., a comparison of the two manuscripts alone is not able to give any answer.

During my work upon the Yasna a second class of manuscripts of the Pahlavi Yasna appeared. But unfortunately the material in my hands during the printing was incomplete; the youth, moreover, of the members preserved did not at once lead one to imagine their real importance. Representatives of this family are, in the first rank, Pt4, Mf4, Mf1, and in the second, Fl1 and Br1. Pt4 came to hand when the first sheets were already in press; Fl1 and Br2 could be used only for the last sheets; and Mf4 did not reach me until after the entire Yasna was completed. The important keystone in Yasna criticism was accordingly wanting to me. The history of the Ms. Pt4 itself has been recounted above. Dastur Peshotan, according to a private communication to West, inherited also another Ms. which is said to be transcribed from the same old original as Pt4. This second copy, I have not even seen, but it ought to be made accessible. The copyist of Pt4 is evidently identical with that of Pt2. The further statement of Dastur Peshotan that Pt4 is copied from an Iranian Pahlavi Yasna is substantiated by the elaborate Pahlavî preface in Pt4. By the aid of this preface the history of the codex may be traced back quite a considerable distance. Pt4 is based upon the Ms. of Hôshâng[1] i Sîyâvakhsh i Shatrôyâr i Bakht-âfrîd i Shatrôyâr. Hôshâng had copied the Ms. of Herbad Mitrô-âpân i Spêntô-dâd i Mitrô-âpân (the grandfather of the copyist of J2, K1, K5, L4) and the latter had copied the Ms. of Herbad Mâh-panâh i Âzâd-mard. Further on in the preface there are still older colophons of Mâh-panâh's predecessors in part recopied verbatim, but their connection is not quite clear. This much, however, may be gathered from them, that Mâh-panâh's Ms. is based upon a Ms. of Farnbag. This Farnbag, in turn, had combined his Ms. out of two Mss., viz., from that of Mâhyâr i Farukho-zâd and that of Mâh-vindâd i Naremâhân i Vâhrâm-Mitrô, one of which Mss. contained the Avestâ text and the other the Pahlavî explanation. This Mâh-vindâd i Naremâhân is one of the oldest authenticated copyists. He wrote the earliest colophon to the Dinkard A.D. 1020.[2]

[1] K5 and J2 were written at the order of a certain Câhil Sangan.

[2] The Pahlavi colophon in J2 fills the last page of the Ms.; a page with a Sanskrit colophon (after the manner of K5) may have been lost, but it is altogether improbable that anything was said in it about the source.

A second copy of the old Hôshâng Yasna is Mf4. This Ms. appears to be somewhat younger than Pt4, but the difference in age cannot be much. At all events they are both independent copies of the same original. Pt4, Mf4 read in

8,7	[illegible]	instead of	[illegible]
50,2	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
57,14	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
9,5	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
12,1	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
46,8	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
11,6	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
48,10	[illegible]	"	[illegible]

Pt4 has 62,4 [illegible], Mf4 [illegible], but struck out pr. m.; both read [illegible] 40,3.

In some places where a blank space in both Mss. indicates some damage in the original, Mf4 omits some more words than does Pt4, e. g. in the Pahlavî to Yasna 68,7.21; 71,8.12. The injury to the Hôshâng Ms. which already existed in the year 1780 had therefore advanced still further by the time that Mf4 was copied.—In Pt4 there are wanting in the Pahlavî to 3,8; 10,9; 28,4a; 33,13a; 37,3; 45,2c, respectively eight, six, five, one, nine and three words, all of which stand in Mf4. Conversely, Pt4 gives eight Pahlavî words in 51,3a and six Pahlavî words in 53,1b which are forgotten in Mf4. This proves sufficiently the mutual independence of the manuscripts. They both reciprocally rectify each other. In general, however, Pt4 surpasses its sister manuscript in correctness.

We do not know when the codex Hôshâng was brought to India. It must still have been in its native land anno 1741, for in this year we have a third descendant from it, namely, the Iranian Yasna sâda of Rûstam, Mf1. In this the copyist has excerpted only the Avestâ text, omitting the Pahlavî commentary. Nevertheless there is not the slightest doubt as to Mf1 being descended from it. The introduction which precedes the Yasna proper is verbatim the same as in the Pahlavî Yasnas, and is not that of the Vendîdâd sâdas nor Yasna sâdas. The small punctuation mark ∴ contrary to the custom of the sâda-texts is frequently employed, and that too chiefly in cases where in the original the Avestâ text was interrupted by the Pahlavî commentary. Besides this, Mf1 participates in many of the characteristic readings of the family of manuscripts represented by Pt4-Mf4. Thus Pt4-Mf4-Mf1 read in

53,2	[illegible]	instead of	[illegible]
41,4	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
9,1	[illegible]	"	[illegible] or [illegible]
10,11	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
19,8	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
43,7	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
63,3	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
44,19	[illegible]	"	[illegible]
32,3	[illegible]	"	[illegible]

All three alike read [illegible] 35,7; [illegible] 53,3.

Mf1 is a manuscript executed with great care. But whereas the two others, Pt4 and Mf4, are purely objective copies, Mf1 is the work of a scholar who often endeavoured to adjust the differences between the Pahlavî Yasna and the Persian sâda-manuscripts known to him. We thus have to distinguish a double element, Hôshâng readings and the intruding Persian Vulgate. What has been said will become clearer from the following comparisons. Thus:

[1] There are other Mss. written by this Hôshâng A.D. 1478 and brought from Sharf-âbâd near Yazd to India by Narîmân Hôshang, according to West, S.B.E. vol. xxxvii, 428 n. 3 and a private communication from West.

44,17	[illegible]	[illegible] (acc. to Jp1. K4 and Mf2)
71,20	[illegible]	[illegible] with Jp1. K4

The thought naturally suggests itself that Rûstam made use of Jp1 in his revision, for according to his autograph postscript to Jp1 this codex was in his hands. But from some of the specimens already given, especially from 43,12; 9,5; 34,7, he must also have had other materials at his disposal. Mf1 was revised again by a second hand, making use in fact of Hôshâng's original. The points in which it differed from this were partly removed by erasures, etc. Thus in Mf1 [illegible] at 10,4 has been corrected to [illegible]. Pt4 and Mf4, to be sure, both have the Vulgate [illegible], but in the latter [illegible] is made out of this by a personal correction of the copyist. This, accordingly, must have been the reading of the old Iranian Yasna in harmony with the Pahlavi translation. Thus are explained the erasures and corrections in

20,3	[illegible] Mf1	[illegible] Pt4. Mf4
43,13	[illegible] Mf1 (but the middle point erased)	[illegible] Pt4. Mf4
32,9	[illegible] Mf1 ([illegible] erased) [illegible] Jp1. K4	[illegible] Pt4
31,13	[illegible] Mf1 ([illegible] corrected to [illegible]) [illegible] Mf2. Jp1. K4	[illegible] Pt4. Mf4
31,16	[illegible] Mf1 ([illegible] erased) [illegible] K4	[illegible] Pt4. Mf4
62,7	[illegible] Mf1 (corrected to [illegible]) [illegible] Jp1. K4	[illegible] Pt4. Mf4 (without [illegible])
45,9	[illegible] Mf1 [illegible] K4	[illegible] Pt4. Mf4
9,11	[illegible] Mf1 ([illegible] on top of an erasure)	[illegible] Pt4. Mf4
45,9	[illegible] Mf1 [illegible] Mf2. K4	[illegible][1] Pt4. Mf4

Sometimes, however, it is the correction that has given rise to the difference, e. g. in 38,5 Mf1 has pr. m. [illegible] in agreement with Pt4, Mf2, but this corrected to [illegible] by the second hand; likewise with [illegible] — [illegible] 48,10.

With the help of these three transcripts which might be increased to four by the addition of Peshotan's second manuscript, the reading of the original codex of Hôshâng may in many cases be restored. It was first by means of the codex Mf4 that I got much light on the subject where a mere comparison of Mf1 and Pt4 led to no result. The late arrival of Mf4 is all the more to be regretted because it is quite an exceptional case that we have more than two direct copies of a lost codex and that codex a standard one as Hôshâng's was, and which would have had to be made the basis of the Yasna text if a happier fortune had been allotted it. In the following I give some specimens of the text restoration. Thus:

Furthermore, two younger descendants of the same family are known to me; they are likewise sâda-texts, namely Br2 and the Yasna text of the Vispered sâda Fl1. The latter is probably a direct transcript of Mf1, corrected in passages according to the Vulgate; the corrections in Mf1 are partly made use of in Fl1, partly ignored.

That Fl1 belongs to the class of the Pahlavi Yasnas is proved by the readings [illegible] 51,12; [illegible] 10,12 (with [illegible]); [illegible] 9,11; the special connection with the family of the Hôshâng codex is shown by readings like [illegible] 32,3; [illegible] [illegible] 48,10; [illegible] [illegible] 9,27; and the direct descent from Mf1 by the following comparisons:

	Mf1. Fl1:	Pt4. Mf4:
10,11	[illegible]	[illegible]
46,12	[illegible]	[illegible]
9,27	[illegible]	[illegible]
9,23	[illegible]	[illegible], [illegible]
9,14	[illegible]	[illegible]
43,12	[illegible]	[illegible]
58,3	[illegible]	[illegible]
43,12	[illegible]	[illegible]
34,7	[illegible]	[illegible]
64,3	[illegible]	[illegible]

The corrections are copied

	Fl1:	Mf1:	Pt4. Mf4:
10,11	[illegible]	[illegible] ([illegible] added sec. m.)	[illegible]
53,9	[illegible]	[illegible] ([illegible] prefixed sec. m.)	[illegible]
38,5	[illegible]	[illegible] ([illegible] corrected to [illegible])	[illegible]
48,10	[illegible]	[illegible] ([illegible] corrected to [illegible])	[illegible]

The copyist of Fl1 has restored the reading of the Vulgate: [illegible] 53,2; [illegible] 43,14; [illegible] 44,11; [illegible] 44,19; [illegible] 44,11. A rarer case is the following: Y. 71,8 Pt4. Mf4 read [illegible], Mf1 [illegible], but Fl1 again [illegible]; likewise in 71,11 Pt4 and Fl1 have [illegible], Mf1 [illegible].

Br2 has the characteristic readings of the Pt4-Mf4 family, namely [illegible] 9,1; [illegible] 53,2; [illegible] 43,7; [illegible] 41,4; [illegible] 60,11. It assumes a peculiar position intermediate between the text of Pt4-Mf4 on the one hand and that of Mf1 on the other. It was hardly copied directly from the old codex but probably rather from a transcript of the same which had been collated with Mf1.

	Br2 reads with Pt4. Mf4:	against	Mf1:
34,10	[illegible]		[illegible]
53,6	[illegible]		[illegible]
32,14	[illegible]		[illegible]
57,33	[illegible] ([illegible] prefixed sec. m.)		[illegible]
43,5	[illegible]		[illegible]

	Conversely Br2 agrees with Mf1:	against	Pt4. Mf4:
34,5	[illegible]		[illegible]
34,7	[illegible]		[illegible]

---

[1] Thus to be corrected in the text!

	Br2 agrees with Mf1:	against: Pt4. Mf4:
50,6	[illegible]	[illegible]
45,1	[illegible]	[illegible]
30,8	[illegible]	[illegible]
46,19	[illegible]	[illegible]

Pt4-Mf4 on the one side and J2-K5 on the other are the offshoots of two independent but cognate lines of the Pahlavi Yasna which have branched off from one common original manuscript. Whether this original manuscript falls among the predecessors of the Hôshâng codex that are enumerated in Pt4, may for the present remain an open question. This common origin is attested by a series of readings. Such are.

9,11 [illegible] Pt4. Mf4 K5; [illegible] J2
10,13 [illegible] Pt4. Mf4. J2. K5.
10,12 [illegible] Mf4. J2; [illegible] Pt4 (K5 defective).

44,11 [illegible] Pt4. Mf4. J2. K5

70,4 [illegible] Pt4. Mf4. J2 K5
32,6 [illegible] Pt4. Mf4 J2. K5
28,6 [illegible] Mf4; [illegible] Pt4. J2 K5
28,8 [illegible] Pt4. Mf4 J2. K5
12,1 [illegible] Pt4 Mf4. J2. K5.

Meanwhile, in consequence of their long separate development the points of difference between the two groups preponderate. Pt4-Mf4 approach rather the Persian sâda-texts, J2-K5 the Indian Vulgate. In general Pt4-Mf4 give a more antique text than J2-K5 in spite of their being four hundred and fifty years younger than the latter. I give a small selection from these differences. Thus read:

To sum up, J2 agrees thirty-one times with Pt4, Mf4, and K5 agrees nineteen times. According to the impression which I have received from a comparison of the two Mss., these numbers correspond to the relation of the codexes throughout. Before I communicated this result to West I asked him for his opinion as to the relation of the Pahlavi translation in J2-K5 to Pt4. The result which West came to is still more striking. For K5 Spiegel's Pahlavi text edited after this codex had to be substituted.

	in Hâ 1:	Hâs 9-11:	Hâs 43-46:	Sum:
Pt4 agrees only with Sp.	8 times	52 times	58 times	118 times
Pt4 „ „ „ J2	16 „	136 „	108 „	260 „
Pt4 differs from both	25 „	140 „	138 „	303 „

Such results, to be sure, are not infallible. Inspection shows how the same mistake may spontaneously arise within two separate families, e. g. such readings as

12,1 [illegible] J2. Mf4 [illegible] K5. Pt4
43,2 [illegible] J2. Mf4 [illegible] K5. Pt4.
Conversely 49,4 [illegible] J2. Pt4 [illegible] K5. Mf4.

When furthermore, e. g. in 19,15 J2 reads with Pt4, Mf4 [illegible] against [illegible] in K5, or in 34,7 the same Mss. read [illegible] against [illegible], one must be on his guard against wishing to draw special conclusions from such mistakes, for they are mistakes that are made quite involuntarily by the pen of the scribe. Taken for all in all the balance appears to stand less favorably for K5, and in the descent K5 apparently stands a step lower than J2. The codex J2 would then neither be transcribed from the Rûstam manuscript nor from a sister manuscript of it but directly from its original. And this original must in fact have been without signature, for Mitrô-âpân does not mention his predecessor in J2, nor does he mention in K5 the predecessor of Rûstam, although such was his custom elsewhere.

The descendants of the Mitrô-âpân manuscripts are few in number. No copy from J2, as it appears, has been preserved. From K5 the Munich Pahlavi Yasna M1 is descended. Furthermore, the Avestâ text in the two older but wholly worthless Yasna sâdas, L17 and B3, is excerpted from K5 but in a very inaccurate and faulty manner.[1]

Between these two families stands the family tree of the Yasna with Sanskrit translation by Neryosangh. Westergaard for the Sanskrit Yasna made use of the two closely related Mss. K6 and P11. He conjectured that both were copies of the same original, in fact of Neryosangh's own personal copy. The original of both copies has since been found in J3. But through the discovery of a second Sanskrit Yasna, S1, independent of J3, the original text of Neryosangh has been moved a long distance back and the state of the case has been completely altered.

These two oldest representatives of the Sanskrit Yasna, J3 and S1, are not dated.[1] According to the paper, S1 may belong to the fifteenth or even to the end of the fourteenth century. J3 has suffered so seriously from dampness that the paper does not permit of any conclusion being drawn as to its age. Dastur Jamaspji's estimate (almost six hundred years) would be too high. S1 breaks off with the next before the last line in 46,19. At the beginning three leaves are missing. The Ms. appears never to have been bound. Now, if we assume that the tooth of time has destroyed, as in the case of most unbound Mss., about as many leaves at the end as at the beginning, the complete Ms. would have once extended to the end of Chap. 47, i. e. exactly as far as Neryosangh himself had carried the translation. Spiegel[2] has clearly shown that Neryosangh's work ends with Chap. 47, and that at that point a much less skillful hand undertook the continuation of the work. Ormazdyâr, son of Râmyâr, a relative of Neryosangh is regarded as the continuer.[3] With respect to this continuation J3 is instructive. In this Ms. the first hand goes only to [illegible] in Y. 54,1. Chap. 55 and the beginning of 56 are supplied by a later hand. Furthermore, a still younger and inferior hand has added a piece out of Chap. 57. In K6 the text goes to Y. 57,29; in P11 to 65,5. In P11 the last part of Chap. 54 is likewise from another hand. Consequently, the immediate continuer of Neryosangh did not go farther than to Chap. 54; the remainder of the Sanskrit translation, from Chap. 54 onwards, is merely the more awkward efforts of younger copyists.

[1] The variants are especially to be compared at Chap. 10. B3. L17 read 12,6 [illegible] [illegible], K5 [illegible]

[1] All the rest of the Sanskrit Yasnas that are known to me go back to J3, these are P11, K6, J4, P3 and the fragment in K15. To these probably belong also the Ms. which was in the private possession of Burnouf. The Mss., however, are hardly co-ordinate with one another. Only P11 and K6 are careful direct transcripts of J3; on the other hand J4 appears to be transcribed from K6, and K15 from P11, cf. 53,6 n. 7. In 31,5 J3.4 (and K6?) read [illegible], P11. K15 [illegible] instead of [illegible]. Also P3 is probably a copy of P11. In case anxious inquiry should be made whether P11 may not be older than J3, I remark that at 17,18 J3 reads [illegible], P11 [illegible]; 7,24 J3 [illegible], P11 [illegible] [illegible]; 20,3 J3 [illegible] (instead of [illegible]), P11 [illegible]; 44,20 J3 has [illegible] with a rather long [illegible], P11 [illegible]; 43,10a in P11 four words are missing which stand in J3.

[2] Introduction to Neriosengh's Sanskrit-Übersetzung p. 12.—The gap which all Mss. have in Y. 11,3 seq. may be explained from an early loss of some leaves of the archetype, but more likely from a gap in the copy used by Neryosangh.

[3] Darmesteter i, cxii.

It is needless to say that Neryosangh based his work upon a Pahlavî Yasna;[1] such a text, however, was just as much a rarety in his time as to-day. Certain readings of Neryosangh which may be inferred from the agreement between J3 and S1 are found elsewhere only in the Pahlavî Yasna Mss., e.g. [illegible] 45,1 (instead of [illegible] of the Vulgate). On the other hand with reference to the Avestâ text Neryosangh does not appear to have held strictly to his copy any more than in his translation of the commentary. So far as we can reconstruct his own written text out of J3-S1, it contained numerous readings of the Vulgate and corrections or oversights of Neryosangh himself.

To the readings of the Vulgate belong [illegible] (instead of [illegible]) 43,16; [illegible] (instead of [illegible]) 32,15; [illegible] 10,15; [illegible] 44,17,—to the emendations: [illegible] 30,1; [illegible] 45,1,—to the oversights: [illegible] 44,20, [illegible] 44,17; [illegible] 12,3; [illegible] 46,9 [2]

To the orthographic peculiarities of Neryosangh belongs the habit of writing [illegible] for [illegible] internally as well as final.[3] In dividing sentences Neryosangh sometimes departs from the traditional division of the Pahlavî translation, cf. 20,1.2.3[4]; 21,1; 38,4; 40,1; 44,2 etc. The omission of four words in 44,18 is likewise probably only an oversight of Neryosangh.

It is not superfluous to illustrate from every side possible the relation of the two old Neryosangh Mss. and of the representatives of the two families of the Pahlavî Yasna. So far as S1 and J3 agree and permit us to draw inferences as to Neryosangh's archetype, this latter occupies an independent position between the two, but inclines rather to the more conservative group Pt4-Mf4.

S1. J3 in 32,3 read [illegible] with K5 (J2), not [illegible] with Pt4. Mf4; furthermore S1. J4. P11 (J3 defective) in 19,6 with J2. K5 [illegible], not [illegible] (Mf4. Pt4).

On the other hand S1. J3 read with Pt4. Mf4: but J2. K5:

46,1	[illegible]	[illegible]
34,1	[illegible]	[illegible]
9,25	[illegible]	[illegible]
43,10	[illegible]	[illegible]
32,6	([illegible]) [illegible]	[illegible]
31,15; 44,19	[illegible]	[illegible]
44,15	[illegible]	([illegible]) [illegible]
10,15	[illegible]	[illegible]
46,17 ([illegible] [illegible])	[illegible]	[illegible]
9,21	[illegible]	[illegible]
40,3	[illegible] wanting	[illegible] appended.

S1-J3 have, besides, a number of older and better readings which are no longer found either in Pt4-Mf4 or in J2-K5. To these belong:

41,4 [illegible]

[illegible] Pt4. Mf4 [illegible] J2. K5.

[illegible], [illegible] 44,11 against [illegible]; [illegible] 44,2 against [illegible]; [illegible], [illegible] 10,17 against [illegible] etc.

In general, however, the Avestâ text varies considerably in the two Sanskrit Mss. and it is interesting to observe the reciprocal relation. In case of differences between S1 and J3, S1 leans strikingly towards Pt4-Mf4, but J3 on the contrary to J2-K5:

	S1:	J3:
12,1	[illegible] with Pt4. Mf4	[illegible] with J2. K5
31,10	[illegible] " Pt4. Mf4	[illegible] " J2. K5

[1] Neryosangh expressly states in his introduction that he has rendered the Yasna into Sanskrit from the Pahlavijandu, cf. Spiegel l. c. p. 2.

[2] Of course it is also possible that the two lines represented by S1 and J3, as they recede, converge not in Neryosangh's original text but in a copy of it, and that many mistakes have first crept into that copy.

[3] 10,8 [illegible] S1, [illegible] J3; [illegible] 28,3; [illegible] 46,14.

[4] Here Pt4 also differs from J2-K5 in the division of the sentence, S1-J3 have the same as Pt4. In two of the following examples the sentence division of Neryosangh has been restored sec. m. in Pt4.

	S1:	J3:
12,3	[illegible] with Pt4. Mf4	[illegible] with J2. K5
29,4	[illegible] " Pt4	[illegible] " J2. K5
29,8	[illegible] [illegible] " Pt4. Mf4	[illegible] " J2. K5
42,6	[illegible] " Pt4. Mf4	[illegible] " J2. K5
10,11	[1] [illegible] " Pt4. Mf4	[illegible] " J2
32,16	[illegible] " Pt4	[illegible] nearer to J2. K5
44,3	[2] [illegible] " Pt4. Mf4	[illegible] with J2[3]
42,2	[illegible] " Pt4. Mf4	[illegible] " J2. K5
43,12	[illegible] " Pt4. Mf4	[illegible] " J2. K5.

The opposite case is much more rare; thus in 34,10 S1 reads with J2. K5 [illegible], J3 with Pt4. Mf4 [illegible]; 43,5 S1 with J2. K5 [illegible], but J3 with Pt4 [illegible], in which connection it is to be noticed that [illegible], [illegible] is the Vulgate.

Where J2-K5 themselves in turn differ, S1 inclines as a rule to J2, J3 to K5:

35,7 [illegible] S1. J2. Pt4—[illegible] K5; [illegible] [illegible] J3.
35,9 [illegible] S1. J2. Pt4—[illegible] J3. K5.
35,10 [illegible] S1. J2. Pt4—[illegible] J3. K5.
31,13 [illegible] S1. J2. Pt4—[illegible] J3. K5.
30,8 [illegible] S1. J2. Pt4—[illegible] J3. K5.
33,8 [illegible] S1. J2—[illegible] K5; [illegible] J3.
10,28 [illegible] S1; [illegible] J2—[illegible] J3. K5b.
43,7 [illegible] S1. J2—[illegible] K5. P11. J4.
32,2 [illegible] [illegible] S1. J2. Pt4—[illegible] [illegible] K5. J3.
43,1 [illegible] S1. J2. Pt4—[illegible] K5. J3.
42,3 [illegible] S1. J2. Pt4—[illegible] K5. J3.[4]

Where the Vulgate and Pahlavi Yasna stand in decided opposition to each other, S1 often agrees with the latter, J3 with the former:

	S1:	J3:
32,1	[illegible]	[illegible]
43,12	[illegible]	[illegible]
31,10	[illegible]	[illegible]
46,18	[illegible]	[illegible]

46,6 [illegible] Pt4. Mf4; [illegible] S1; [illegible] K5; [illegible] J2, but J3 [illegible] with the Vulgate.

The text of the Sanskrit translation has remained in both Mss. more alike. With reference to the Avestâ text, however, the general impression is that S1 gives a much more correct and antique text than J3; the latter stands much below S1 in value.

S1 offers readings which are alone of their kind, e. g. [illegible] [illegible] 12,5, or are better than the readings of all Pahlavi Yasnas, e. g. [illegible] 9,5 (: [illegible] Pt4. Mf4; [illegible] K5. J2.3). The text of J3 is often much disfigured by grave blunders and bad readings, e. g. [illegible] 9,14 (S1 [illegible]); [illegible] [illegible] 46,4 (S1 [illegible] [illegible]).

When S1, therefore, in the case of a conflict between Pt4-Mf4 and J2-K5, throws its weight in the scale in favor of Pt4-Mf4, and when again in a conflict between J2 and K5 it favors for the most part J2, this Ms. serves to corroborate completely the judgment passed above in regard to the relation of the four Pahlavi Yasnas.—S1 must be regarded, if not as the direct, at least as the truest continuation of the Neryosangh text. In favor of this also speaks the presumable compass of the Ms. to the end of Chap. 47 and likewise the palæography, for palæographically S1 stands next to the two old Neryosangh Khorda Avestâs, J9 and H2. In J3 on the contrary the text appears to have passed through a second recension.

While the cases of accord between J3 and J2-K5, especially K5, down to Chap. 47 inclusive, appear more sporadic, they increase on the contrary in a very marked degree from 48-53. I give a small selection of such cases:

48,1 [illegible] (with K5); five words are wanting in 48,5 with J2. K5; 49,1 [illegible] (K5); 49,9 [illegible] (K5); 50,3 K5 [illegible] (instead of [illegible]), J3 [illegible] with [illegible] expunged; 50,5 [illegible] [illegible] (K5); 50,7 [illegible] (K5); ib. [illegible] (K5); 51,6 [illegible] (K5); 51,17 [illegible] (K5 [illegible]); 53,4 [illegible] (K5 [illegible]); ib. [illegible] (K5); 53,5 [illegible] (K5 [illegible]); 53,7 [illegible] (K5); ib. [illegible] (K5); ib. [illegible] (K5); 53,9 [illegible] (K5. J2).

It follows as a necessary consequence of this, that the continuer of Neryosangh's Sanskrit translation must have used K5. In fact he made K5 the basis of his continuation of 48-53, and with the help of this Ms. he revised at the same time the text already translated. Now since Mitrô-âpân, however, wrote his Yasna in 1323, the continuer of Neryosangh cannot possibly have been his cousin Ormazdyâr, for Ormazdyâr, the son of Râmyâr, lived eight generations before Pêshyôtan who, in the year 1397, wrote the colophon of the Munich manuscript of the Gôsht-i Fryânô.[1] If, with West, we reckon the medium length of a generation at twenty five years, the result brings us to the end of the twelfth century as the date of Ormazdyâr. This must also be about the date of Neryosangh.

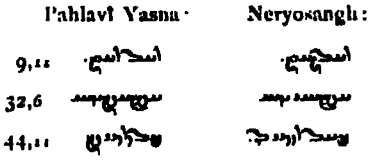
[1] So to be corrected in the edition as the reading of S1! The readings from S1 in sheets 7 and 8 could not be inserted except in the proofs.

[2] So to be put into the text itself in the edition!

[3] K5 quite similar.

[4] This rule of course has exceptions: 44,8 [illegible] K5. S1—[illegible] J2. Pt4. J3.

A further question now arises: which manuscript of the Pahlavî Yasna can Neryosangh have used for his work, and had the Pahlavî Yasna already in his time split up into two groups? The latter question I think must be answered in the negative in consideration of certain inferior readings which are common to both, while Neryosangh has the right reading. Some of these corrections Neryosangh may himself have made, but in other cases this is improbable, for his Avestâ knowledge was not at any rate profound. The most important are:



Pahlavî Yasna:
Neryosangh:
9,11
32,6
44,11

The Ms. in which the two lines converge as they run back, cannot therefore be placed before Neryosangh, but it must be placed before 1280, at which time the Ms. of Rûstam and probably also of his nephew Mitrô-âpân-î Spend-dâd were written. Between the Ms. of the last named Mitrô-âpân and that of Farnbag, there intervenes only a single Ms., that of Mâh-panâh-î Âzâd-mard. This, after all, must be the ancestral manuscript of both families of the Pahlavî Yasna and at the same time a sister manuscript of Neryosangh's original source. Regarding Rûstam, we know from the second colophon in K1, that he came from Iran to the land of the Hindus and there copied the Pahlavî Vendîdâd. He likewise copied the Vîspered in 1278, in India. The Gôsht-i Fryânô,[2] however, he probably copied in Iran. Now, did he copy the Yasna in Iran or in India? If he copied it in India this cannot have been done directly from the Ms. of Mâh-panâh, for the latter's Ms. remained behind in Iran where it was transcribed nearly contemporaneously with Rûstam, by Mitrô-âpân-î Spend-dâd. Rûstam in that case must have brought with him to India another copy of the Mâh-panâh Ms., a Ms. X from which the Indian Pahlavî Yasna is descended. If he copied it in Iran, then the Ms. written by him must itself be the ancestral manuscript of the Indian line. The former supposition that he copied the Yasna in India receives material support from J2. Of the two nearly related Indian Yasna Mss., J2 and K5, only one, namely, K5, is positively a copy of the Rûstam manuscript. As to J2, however, it may in a measure be made probable that this Ms. is copied from an older Ms., thus from the original source of the Rûstam Ms., which still existed in India in the year 1323. This would be the X assumed above.

According to what has been said, all the Mss. of the Pahlavî Yasna, as far back as the Mâh-panâh Ms. inclusive, are later than Neryosangh (ca. 1200). As in all probability he could derive his originals only from Iran, there comes into consideration, so far as he is concerned, only the Farnbag Ms. (ca. 1110). The Farnbag Ms. itself, however, he cannot have used, for this remained in Iran where it was copied by Mâh-panâh about the time of Neryosangh. He must have had before him another copy (Y) of the Farnbag Ms., consequently a sister copy of the Mâh-panâh manuscript. The mutual relation of our manuscripts is fully in harmony with this supposition.

The last question is this: how did Farnbag come to combine his Pahlavî Yasna from two different Mss. instead of being content with a single original? Probably because in his time an Avestâ-Pahlavî Yasna was no longer surviving, or rather had not yet come into existence. The ritual of the Yasna, as shown by positive evidence, goes back as far as Sassanian times; the Yasna texts themselves, however, with the Pahlavî translation, were inherent in the various Nasks, especially in the Stôd-Yasht Nask. The compilation of the text book Yasna may have been first undertaken even at a very late period. Might not the two Dasturs Mâh-yâr and Mâh-vindâd (about 1020) have first separately undertaken this work and Farnbag have united their newly edited texts for the first time into Avestâ-Pahlavî Yasna?[3] In that case the Introduction in Pt4 would disclose the entire history of the Pahlavî Yasna. A tentative rough draught of a genealogy of this entire class is given in the middle of this page.

[3] Since the above was written, West has drawn my attention to the fact that this same Mâh-vindâd is several times cited as commentator in the Pahlavî Yasna; compare West's note in S.B.E. vol. v p. 244. The final redaction of our Pahlavî translation of the Yasna may accordingly be due to Farnbag.

As to the two classes of sâda-texts, the first, or that of the Vendîdâd sâdas, falls into the two subdivisions which are already familiar from the Vendîdâd, namely, into the Persian and the Indian. The Persian Mss. do not offer so rich a store of original old readings for the Yasna text as they do for the Vendîdâd, inasmuch as the other sources are in this case also more abundant. But they are very important as a control. Associated, furthermore, with the two Mss. Mf2 and Jp1, above discussed, is the Ms. K4. K4 is not a real Vendîdâd sâda, but it is a Vishtâsp sâda, in which the eight Fargards of the Vishtâsp Yasht are inserted, instead of the ten sections of the Vendîdâd, between the portions of the Yasna augmented by the Vispered. The places of the eighth and tenth sections of the Vendîdâd (Farg. 17-18 and 21-22) are left vacant. The arrangement of the text is otherwise the same as in the Vendîdâd sâda. How far Mf1 also shares in this class has been discussed above.

The three Iranian Mss. known to me, namely, Mf2-Jp1-K4, give a Yasna text independent of one another. They often agree with the Pahlavî Yasna in opposition to the Indian Vulgate; more often still they agree only with the Iranian line of the same; sometimes they each go their own way. Their agreements and their differences as regards one another are manifold, yet K4 inclines somewhat more to Jp1 than to Mf2. All three read in agreement with the Pahlavî Yasna and in opposition to the Indian Vulgate:

[illegible] 43,16, [illegible] 46,10; [illegible] 41,4; [illegible] 19,8; [illegible] 46,8. They leave out the glosses which have crept into the Vulgate, e. g. 55,5.

All three agree fully or substantially in original readings:

[illegible] (Mf2 [illegible]): [illegible] 34,7; [illegible] 44,11; [illegible] 32,14, [illegible] 33,8; [illegible] 34,8; [illegible] 30,4; [illegible] 31,3; [illegible] (with Pt4) 44,13; [illegible] 46,1; [illegible] 35,9; [illegible] 38,5; [illegible] 40,3.

They ultimately therefore go back to a common archetype.—All three differ:

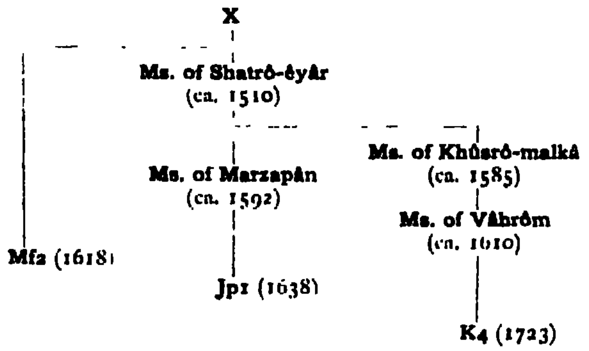
The numbers of the above examples give just about the actual relation.

As to the original history of K4 we are well informed from the colophon. Vêh-mard, the son of Frêdûn, copied the Ms. in the year 1723 from the Ms. of Vâhrôm Marzapân, second cousin of his great-grandfather (about 1610). Vâhrôm used as original the Ms. of Khûsrô-malkâ Anoshag-rûbânô, son of his great-uncle, who wrote about 1585. Jp1, which stands nearer to K4 and which has also in common with it the last paragraph of the colophon, goes back in the first place to the Ms. of the father of its copyist, who in the year 1592 copied the Dâdistân-i Dînîk in K35.[1] It is therefore very questionable whether Khûsrô-malkâ could have used the text of the father of the copyist of Jp1, and whether both did not rather make use of the same original, the Ms. of Shatrô-çyâr. A very problematic genealogy might be outlined in the following manner:



The successive stages in the genealogy correspond exactly to the relative merit of the three manuscripts. If at the outset the supposition that Mf2, Jp1 are copied from the same original, presents itself on account of the close agreement of these two Mss. (cf. p. xxii-xxiii), and if on the other hand, the common origin of both has to be moved farther back on account of the appearance of K4, this is merely an additional proof that in Iran copies were made with a care that can hardly be paralleled in India.

In the list of the Indian Vendîdâd sâdas I made use of some additional Mss. for the Yasna, S2 and in passages Ml1, L3 and Bb1. On the other hand, the important and good Ms. Br1[1] I have not yet used. Traces of the two manuscript families (cf. p. xxi) are found also in the Yasna:

49,1	[illegible] L2 K10 Dh1. Ml1	[illegible] L1. B2 [illegible] S2. O2.

Ml1, S2 assume an intermediate position similar to Dh1. In general, however, the Yasna text in both manuscript families is reduced to greater uniformity than that of the Vendidâd and the distinction destroyed through the all-corrupting modern Vulgate. The latter in fact often upsets the relation entirely:

34,7	[illegible] O2 L1 B2 [illegible] K10	[illegible] L2. S2 Dh1
49,9	[illegible] L2 O2	[illegible] K10. L1 B2. Dh1. Ml1 [illegible] S2.

The text of the Yasna sâdas in many passages resembles that of the Vendidâd sâdas. In general, however, it represents still more faithfully the oral Vulgate of India. Thus at Y. 58,6 the better Ms. family of the Vendidâd sâdas, represented by L2, reads [illegible], the other reads with the Vulgate [illegible], which is the reading of all Yasna sâdas. Readings which belong to the Yasna sâda alone are therefore to be received with caution. But here and there in the old copies a choice bit of grain is to be found. In respect to orthography they are actually more consistent than the Mss. with translation, e. g. in distinguishing [illegible] and [illegible].

The Yasna sâdas which were accessible to me fall into two families; one of these is represented by C1, K11, Lb2, the other by H1, J6.7, Jm1, L13, O1. The rest of the Yasna sâdas, like J5, L20, are so incorrect that they might have been left wholly out of account. The Mss. of the first family all belong to a younger period in which the Vulgate, ever farther encroaching, has already extensively levelled the family distinctions. I first give some characteristic catchwords for the two groups:

48,7	[illegible] C1. K11. Lb2	[illegible] H1. J6. Jm1 [illegible] J7 [illegible] L13
44,12	[illegible] C1. K11. Lb2	[illegible] H1. J6.7. Jm1
48,5	[illegible] C1. K11	[illegible] H1. J6.7. L13
40,3	[illegible] C1. K11. Lb2	[illegible] H1. J6.7. Jm1
40,4	[illegible] C1. K11. Lb2	[illegible] J6. Jm1 [illegible] H1. J7
50,5	[illegible] K11. Lb2	[illegible] H1. J6.7. Jm1. L13
43,12	[illegible] C1. K11	[illegible] H1. J6.7. L13
44,3	[illegible] Lb2 [illegible] C1. K11 (pr. m.)	[illegible] H1. J6.7. Jm1. L13
46,5	[illegible] C1 [illegible] K11	[illegible] H1. J6 7. Jm1. L13. Lb2
48,1	[illegible] C1. K11. Lb2	[illegible] H1. J6.7. Jm1. L13
45,9	[illegible] C1. K11 [illegible] C1. K11	[illegible] H1. J6.7. Jm1. L13 [illegible] H1. J6.7. Jm1. L13

In general the smaller group C1-K11 is the more conservative. Sometimes only one Ms. has preserved the older reading, the other has the Vulgate, e. g. in 28,4 only C1 still reads [illegible], Lb2 [illegible] and K11 [illegible] with H1. J7. L13; C1 at 28,11 [illegible], K11 with the others [illegible], in 31,5 C1 [illegible], K11 with the others [illegible]; 43,4 C1 [illegible], K11 with the rest [illegible]; in 39,2 C1 still reads [illegible] with [illegible], the others with [illegible]; conversely in 46,19 only K11 still has [illegible], C1 with the rest [illegible]; K11 in 46,10 [illegible], C1 with the rest [illegible].

Certain indications point to the fact that C1, K11, Lb2 ultimately go back to a Yasna which was subsequently imported from Persia.

Thus K11 reads in 68,2 [illegible] with Jp1. K4 instead of [illegible] (the confusion of [illegible] and [illegible] is thoroughly Persian); similarly K11 in 46,3 [illegible], in 30,4 [illegible] with the characteristic [illegible];

---

[1] M2 abridges the Yasna for the most part.

C1 in 46,1 [illegible] with the three Persian sâda-texts, in 28,5 [illegible] as K4, in 46,8 [illegible] with K4, in 9,28 [illegible] as Jp1.

In its copies, however, this presupposed Iranian codex has been almost completely Indianized. Thus C1, K11 share with the other Yasna sâdas in most mistakes, e. g.

[illegible] 44,10; [illegible] 49,9; [illegible] 45,11; [illegible] 48,9; [illegible] 10,7; [illegible] C1, [illegible] K11 in 31,4; the insertion of [illegible] in 49,8.

An Indian ancestral manuscript appears to lie at the basis of the other group. In this set H1, J6 seem closely connected; both must have been copied from the same original. Both read

50,8 [illegible]; 57,13 [illegible] [illegible]; 49,1 [illegible], 57,33 [illegible]; 55,3 [illegible]

From J6 again Jm1 is copied, and from H1 the Ms. J7 is transcribed with many corrections and improvements:

49,9	[illegible] H1. J7	[illegible] J6. Jm1
51,12	[illegible] H1. J7	[illegible] J6. Jm1
53,6	[illegible] H1. J7	[illegible] J6. Jm1
57,28	[illegible] H1. J7	[1] [illegible] J6. Jm1

9,22 [illegible] H1. J7, 56,3 [illegible] J6. Jm1; 56,4 [illegible] J6, [illegible] [illegible] Jm1; 55,6 [illegible] J6, [illegible] Jm1; 57,27 [illegible] both; 47,3 (in Chap. 18) [illegible] both; 50,9 [illegible] both; 58,6 [illegible] is originally wanting and has been supplied sec. m. in both.

Often only one of the two old Mss. H1, J6 has the good reading, whereas this has been displaced in the others by the inferior Vulgate.

Thus J6 in 44,18 reads pr. m. [illegible] (with C1. K11), H1 and the rest [illegible]; 9,10 J6 [illegible], the rest [illegible]; but especially H1 e. g. 9,5 [illegible], the rest [illegible]; 10,1 [illegible], the rest [illegible]; 10,4 [illegible] [illegible], the rest [illegible], 53,6 [illegible], the rest [illegible]; 44,19 [illegible] (C1. K11), the rest [illegible]; 50,1 [illegible] (C1 [illegible]), the rest [illegible]; 30,1 [illegible], the rest [illegible] [illegible].

H1 is in fact the most respectable Ms. of the entire class of Yasna sâdas.

O1 is a very exact transcript of L13. This itself ultimately flows from the same source as H1-J6. The direct original of L13, however, must have been extensively corrected according to J2-K5.

L13 with J2 and K5 has at 9,10 [illegible] instead of [illegible]; 9,11 [illegible] instead of [illegible]; 46,11 [illegible], 40,1 [illegible]; 48,7 [illegible] and inserts at 71,9 [illegible]. O1 at 49,4 has with both [illegible] (in L13 the passage is wanting pr. m.). At 29,5 L13 reads with J2 [illegible] [illegible] (J2 [illegible] [illegible]); 50,2 [illegible] [illegible] instead of [illegible][1]; 49,11 [illegible] (J2 [illegible] [2][illegible]); 48,6 [illegible] is inserted with J2.

More rarely there prevails a remarkable agreement between L13 and K5 alone, as [illegible] 29,11; [illegible] [illegible] 33,6 (instead of [illegible]). Sometimes in L13 the correction is added sec. m. according to J2, K5, e.g. 32,14 [illegible] with added [illegible] (J2, K5 [illegible]), in 49,11d [illegible] [illegible] is added sec. m. O1 in both cases has received the correction pr. m. It is, therefore, probably to be ascribed to the influence of J2 when L13, in opposition to the other Yasna sâdas of this group, has apparently more often preserved the old reading, e. g. 49,9 [illegible] (so J2, not K5), or 53,7 [illegible] (so also K11) against [illegible] in H1, J6.7, Jm1.—L13 therefore is not an independent Ms. and is to be used with caution.

The same is true in a still greater degree of the incorrect Paris Yasna sâda P6. Although its basis is an Indian Yasna sâda, still it is constantly influenced by K5, as the numerous citations from the codex show. In this case also we must not assume that the same copyist combined his text simultaneously from two different Mss.; he made use rather of a Ms. that had been extensively corrected after K5.

The Vispered is not an independent book of itself, but it is a collection of supplementary pieces to the Yasna which are inserted in certain chapters of the Yasna or appended to them in the ritual or so-called service of the Vispered. The Vispered has the three classes of Mss. in common with the Yasna or book which forms its basis. In the first class, or that with translation, however, there is wanting the sub-group which in the other case is constituted by the Sanskrit Yasna. The difference between the text accompanied by the old commentary and the sâda-text is most striking in the case of the Vispered. The former aims at the greatest possible brevity, omitting all that has already been given or is perfectly easily understood. The ritual text of the sâda

[1] In J6 [illegible] can also be read.

[1] In J2 the error arose from the copyist's first having written [illegible] and then having only partially corrected himself.

[2] Also K5 originally had [illegible] [illegible]

Mss., on the other hand, is overladen with formulas and repetitions. The Pahlavi Mss., however, give the pith of the chapters complete, so far as this does not consist of repetitions.[1]

All Pahlavî Vispereds descend from the old Copenhagen Ms. K7a. This is the only independent Ms. of the entire class. As it is well preserved with the exception of one or two missing leaves, we have to resort to the younger substitute Mss. only in small measure. The copies that go back to K7a are M6.4, J15, P14. The relationship of these Mss. will become clear from the following points.

(1) All five Mss. read 16,3 [illegible] (instead of [illegible]); 19,2 [illegible] [illegible]; 12,4 [illegible] (twice); 12,3 [illegible]; 1,2 [illegible] [illegible] K7a. M6, [illegible] M4. J15. P14; 7,1 [illegible] K7a. M6. P14, [illegible] M4. J15; 15,1 [illegible] K7a. M6 (?). P14, [illegible] [illegible] M4. J15.

The abbreviations agree almost exactly in all the manuscripts. As K7a is undoubtedly the oldest and in general the most correct Ms., it must be regarded as the mother of the others.

(2) M6 stands nearer to K7a than to the others: K7a. M6 in 11,2 have [illegible], the others [illegible], both at 7,2 [illegible], M4. J15 [illegible], P14 [illegible]; 18,2 [illegible] is wanting pr. m. in K7a and in M6, but stands in P14 and J15.[2]

(3) M6.4 J15 P14 vary uniformly from K7a: 11,19 [illegible] K7a. [illegible] M6, so or [illegible] the rest; 22,2 [illegible] K7a. [illegible] M6 4, [illegible] P14, [illegible] J15.

(4) Similarly M6.4. J15: The words [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] 21,3 stand in K7a, are wanting in M6 4. J15, but are found again in P14; likewise 21,3 [illegible] is wanting in M6.4 J15, but stands in K7a and as [illegible] in P14.

(5) M4. J15. P14 have mistakes in common in opposition to K7a. M6: 22,1 [illegible] K7a. M6; [illegible] M4. J15. P14. At times the agreement extends only to M4. P14, e. g. in the omission of the words [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] in 6,1.

(6) M4. J15 have special peculiarities of their own in opposition to the three others: 7,4 [illegible]; 8,1 M4 reads [illegible] [illegible], J15 [illegible] [illegible], but P14 [illegible], K7a. M6 [illegible] [illegible]; M4. J15 have 2,5 uniformly [illegible] [illegible] instead of [illegible] which is omitted in K7a. M6. P14.

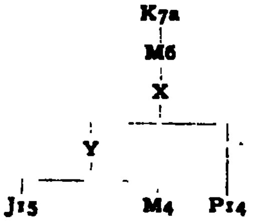
The three younger Mss. M4, J15, P14 must accordingly be traced back to K7a through the intervening link M6. They are, however, neither direct nor fully co-ordinate copies of M6, inasmuch as they have similar mistakes in opposition to M6, and as M4, J15 in turn mutually have special points of variation from P14. Presuming therefore that neither of the Mss. M4 nor J15 is a transcript of the other, which is unlikely I think, then two missing links in the descent must be assumed:



The Paris Ms. No. 14 of Dastur Shâpûr, who was still known to Anquetil (i, 1 p. 460), evidently bears the marks of the text revision which has been popular with the copyists since the time of Jamasp and Darab.

Up to this point I have silently assumed that the old Copenhagen Ms. 7a is the Ms. of Rûstam, the great-great-uncle of Mitrô-âpân. It must not, however, be passed over in silence that Westergaard (Pref. p. 13) expressed doubt as to the authenticity of the Ms., and that even to-day his doubt does not appear to be wholly unjustifiable. Let us briefly present again the facts in the case. The old portion of the Ms. K7 begins with the Vîspered sâda (K7b); to this a Nîrang and an Avestâ fragment are appended as closing prayers; then follows on fol. 107 the colophon with the name of the copyist, namely, Rûdastakhm (Rûstam), son of Mitrô-âpân, and the date 627 of the Persian era (A. D. 1258, or more probably 1278). Then follows on fol. 108 by the same hand the Pahlavî Vîspered without any special postscript. The position of the colophon is striking. One may conceive that Rûstam at first copied only the sâda-text and finished it, and that later a Pahlavi Ms. of the Vîspered came into his hands, and that he added a copy of this to the former. In this event the colophon of K7b would count also for

---

[1] Everything that is omitted in the Pahlavî Vîspered is designated by †† in the edition. I take this opportunity of remarking that the note to Vp. 20,3 is not quite right. The words cited from K7a are not wrongly inserted in place of 20,3, but rather 20,3 is left out in the Pahlavî Vîspered as not requiring any explanation, and then only this clause (page 28b line 8) is brought in from the long introduction to Chap. 21 and translated because it has not occurred before in the Vîspered.

[2] From M4 I have made no note, the word therefore apparently stands in that.

K7a, at least so far as the copyist is concerned; not, however, of course with reference to the exact date. The Ms. accordingly would be sixty-five (or forty-five) years older than the four well-known Mss. of Mitrô-âpân of 1323 and 1324; yet in spite of this, the Ms. has come to us in far better condition than the other four. This may have been Westergaard's special ground of objection. It is chiefly the bad ink, however, that has worked destructively in the case of Mitrô-âpân; as an actual fact the paper of K7a-b could be so old. If Westergaard be in the right, then the Rûstam Ms. existed only in a younger copy and the copyist transcribed the colophon of the original without adding his own postscript. In this case the colophon would count of course only for the sâda-text and there would not be the slightest ground of proof to the effect, that the Pahlavî Vîspered also goes back to a Rûstam manuscript.

The question as to genuineness arises also in the case of the old composite codex K20 whose style of writing in many respects recalls Vîspered K7. The Ms. K20 has a series of colophons for the various texts, and among them are three with names and dates. In all three the well-known Mitrô-âpân is mentioned as copyist. The first, on fol. 38a after the Gosht-i Fryânô, is dated on the day Rashn of the month Dîn of the year 690 A.Y. (= November 8, 1321); the second, after the Hâdhôkht-Nask, on the day Rashn of the month Âtûr of the Pârsî year 720 + 20 after Yezdegerd (= August 28, 1371); the third, after the Shâyast-lâ-shâyast, on the day Âdar of the month Mihr of the Pârsî year 700 (= July 30, 1331). Consequently an unnatural order 1321, 1371, 1331. The middle date is particularly striking on this account, that in such case Mitrô-âpân would have done the copying full fifty years after his earliest work of the year 1321, whereas West reckons the sixtieth year of age as the extreme limit of activity of a copyist. The date must therefore rest upon a mistake in writing. Moreover, the long interval between the first and second colophon is in contradiction to the entire Ms. which appears to be written in a single style, and that not the characteristic handwriting of Mitrô-âpân. In this case therefore Westergaard (Pref. p. 3 n. 1) was unquestionably right in believing that K20 was not written by Mitrô-âpân himself, but it is certainly a very old copy of a scribe who copied in one composite codex a series of smaller Mss. and among these certainly three of Mitrô-âpân and transferred the colophons of his originals without making additions.

K20 has a series of texts in common with M6. The Ms. M6, likewise a collective codex, comes from the copyist Pêshyôtan and is dated A.Y. 766 (A.D. 1397). West has treated of the relation of these two in S.B.E. vol. v, Intr. 30. Both Mss. are nearly related and are either copied from the same original, and K20 in fact some years earlier than M6; or K20 is transcribed from an older copy of the original of M6; but in no case is M6 copied from K20. For some texts Pêshyôtan certainly used a Rûstam manuscript. His postscript to the Ardâ-Vîrâf and Gôsht-î Fryâno (cf. Haug and West, The Book of Arda Viraf p. 266) bears witness to this. Now since the Pahlavî Vîspered in M6 is a direct and very exact copy of K7a, the fact just mentioned would again speak in favor of the genuineness of the Rûstam manuscript. But as no second Rûstam Ms. has been preserved which would render possible a comparison of the handwriting, the question remains unsolved. The fact that K7a is the Pahlavî Vîspered which is to be taken as a basis, remains established, for the converse relation -K7a a copy of M6—is excluded: M6 has several slight inferiorities in the text as opposed to K7a, but never an older, better reading than the latter. The Ms. K7a must under any circumstances therefore be placed before 1397.

The sâda-texts which I have made use of for the Vîspered have been partly disposed of above. There remains only the question as to the relation of the old Copenhagen Vîspered sâda K7b to the ordinary Vîspered sâdas, namely, H1, J8, Jm5, K11, L27, Pt3, P12.[1]

A common archetype lies at the basis of all Vîspered sâdas. H1 etc., however, are neither directly nor indirectly to be derived from the older Copenhagen text, but they form rather within the sâda-class an independent group. The signs of the common archetype are:

[1] In H1, Pt3, K11 the complete Yasna sâda, to which the Vîspered is a supplement, precedes the Vîspered sâda with Kiriâ. In H1, K11 the Sîrôza is furthermore appended. All Vîspered sâdas by citing Yasna chapter openings at particular places point accordingly to the Yasna text which is always presupposed for the Vîspered. The two Persian Vîspered sâdas (or those copied in India after a Persian original), namely Fl1 and Kh1, on the contrary give the Yasna in extenso, mixed with the Vîspered.

All read 15,3 [illegible] instead of [illegible]; 11,16 [illegible] instead of [illegible]; 15,1 [illegible] ([illegible]) instead of [illegible] ([illegible]) of the other manuscripts. All affix [illegible] twice in 14,1.

On the other hand H1 etc. converge into a separate ancestral manuscript which is independent of K7b. Proof:

	H1 etc.:	K7b:
16,1	[illegible] (except K11)	[illegible]
14,1	[illegible] [illegible]	[illegible] [illegible]
10,2	([illegible]) [illegible]	[illegible]
12,5	[illegible]	[illegible]
12,2	[illegible]	[illegible]
14,1	[illegible]	[illegible]
21,1	[illegible] (except J8. K11)	[illegible]
12,2	[illegible] inserted	deest
15,1	[illegible] or [illegible]	[illegible]
11,1	[illegible] inserted	deest

In general the manuscript group H1 etc. is far more permeated by the Vulgate than is K7b.

K7b frequently gives the better text and inclines to K7a and to the Persian Mss. (e. g. [illegible] 9,1, [illegible] 7,2; [illegible] 12,4).

Among the ordinary Vispered sâdas, H1 is undoubtedly the oldest manuscript. It plays here a rôle similar to that in the Yasna, inasmuch as it alone has sometimes preserved the old reading, cf. [illegible] in 22,2. A proof that the rest are not descended from H1 itself is furnished at 12,5, where H1 reads [illegible], but the others with K7a K7b) read [illegible]. In regard to the rest so much only may be said, that Jm5 and Pt3 stand nearest to each other, cf. [illegible] 12,1; [illegible] [illegible] 2,2.

The Vispered text of the compiled manuscript Fl1 is most nearly related to K4: both have [illegible] 3,5, [illegible] 8,1; [illegible] ib.; [illegible] 23,1. The source of Fl1, however, is sometimes better than K4. cf. [illegible] 11,19.

I must mention that I did not have at my disposal the entire Iranian material for the Vispered. The catalogue of the Mulla Firuz Library records a "Yzeshne with Nirang and Vispered, made in Eran A.Y. 1080" which was not accessible to me.

All the texts that remain of the Avestâ proper, after excluding the trio Yasna-Vîspered-Vendidâd, are comprised for the most part under the collective name Khorda Avestâ, although the application of the term in so extended a sense is not justified. These texts contain a twofold element: the Yashts and the minor prayer formulas. The latter make up the chief contents of the Khorda or small Avestâ in the proper sense of the term, which is a book designed for the use of the laity.[1] A sharp line of distinction, however, no longer exists. Certain Yashts which were already contained in the Bakân-Yasht-Nask, the real Yasht book of the Sassanian Avestâ,[2] form an integral part of most Khorda Avestâs. Conversely, the Yasht codexes are preceded by the same pieces (alphabet, prayers, Nyâishes) as the lay-breviaries. It is only for the texts of the Khorda Avestâ that we can assume a continuous oral transmission and a consequent development of a "Vulgate"; whereas the great Yashts have been preserved almost exclusively by written transmission. The texts of the great Yashts are far less common, but inasmuch as the scribe has not been constantly influenced by a memorized text, they have been far more accurately handed down from transcript to transcript.

If we first divide the respective Mss. according to their contents, we shall have three groups:

(1) the pure Yasht Mss., the chief representative of which is F1, the old Ms. of Âsadîn;

(2) the Khorda Avestâs in the strict sense of the term (one of the most comprehensive Mss. is O3);

(3) the combined Mss., a combination of No. 1 and 2 into a great collective volume (a type of this group is Pt1).

Only No. 1 and No. 3 call for detailed description. In order to make clear the relation of the first group to the third I shall begin with the sixteenth or Dîn-Yasht. At first glance the text of this Yasht appears to be split up into two recensions. In reality, however, the one recension is merely the very corrupt Vulgate of the same text which is fairly correctly transmitted in other manuscripts. This corrupt Vulgate may be traced as far back as the fourteenth century. It is to be found already in Jm4 (A.D. 1352), although the corruption had not yet so far advanced. The corrupt Vulgate text is the text of the Khorda Avestâ transmission, but the better text is that of the Yasht transmission. F1, E1, K16 share in the latter,

---

[1] As is well known, the Khorda Avestâs are by no means exclusively confined to Avestâ texts, but contain also Pâzand and Modern Persian texts.

[2] Cf. especially West, S.B.E. vol. xxxvii, Intr. 45.

whereas Pt1, L18 as well as the Khorda Avestâs participate in the former. I shall give in the first place a few specimens:

	Yasht transmission: F1. E1. K16	Khorda Avestâ transmission:
16,2	[illegible]	[illegible] Jm4 (the first [illegible] sec. m.) [illegible] Pt1 [illegible] L18
ib.	[illegible]	[illegible] Jm4 [illegible] Pt1 [illegible] L18
ib.	[illegible]	[illegible] Jm4 [illegible] Pt1. L18
16,3	[illegible]	[illegible] Jm4 [illegible] Pt1. L18
16,7	[illegible]	[illegible] Jm4 [illegible] Pt1. L18
16,13	[illegible]	[illegible] Jm4 [illegible] Pt1

Sometimes, however, as often elsewhere, it is the Vulgate that has the better reading:

16,15 [illegible] F1. E1. K16 [illegible] Pt1. L18.

Or the Vulgate creeps into all later Mss. without distinction as to class:

16,17 [illegible] Jm4. F1 (pr. m.) { [illegible] E1. K16. L18
[illegible] Pt1

In this Yasht Pt1 is independent of F1; in most of the other Yashts on the contrary, Pt1 like E1 is a true transcript of F1. Readings which bear witness to the close relationship of these three manuscripts are e. g.: [illegible] Yt. 10,81; [illegible] 10,33; [illegible] 10,74; [illegible] 10,111; [illegible] (instead of [illegible]) 8,23.

Certain mistakes in Pt1, E1 can be explained only from F1. In Yt. 13,133, for example, the scribe of F1 had space in the line only for [illegible] and forgot to add the [illegible] in the next line; both transcribers have consequently made [illegible] out of this. In 13,110 the fifth name was mutilated in similar manner. The line ends with [illegible] in F1 and is continued in the next line by [illegible]; the [illegible] therefore was accidentally omitted. E1 makes of this [illegible], Pt1 [illegible]. In 19,67 Âsadin Kâkâ started quite correctly to write [illegible] as he was accustomed to do, but [illegible] got a little too near the preceding [illegible] and became indistinct. In order that there might be no doubt about the matter he wrote [illegible] a second time above it between the two [illegible]s. Both copyists misinterpreted this emendation. The scribe of Pt1 saw in it a correction of [illegible] and wrote [illegible]; the copyist of E1 misapplied the [illegible] and wrote [illegible]. In 19,87 F1 has [illegible] [illegible]; but [illegible], as sometimes in old Mss., very closely resembles [illegible]. Pt1 copied correctly, but E1 misread the [illegible] as [illegible]. At Yt. 19,11 F1 rightly has [illegible] and 17,56 [illegible], but both times the final [illegible] is made so small that at first glance it looks like [illegible]; and that is the way both copyists took it. Conversely, at 13,131 in F1 the [illegible] of [illegible] looks like an [illegible]; accordingly Pt1, E1 have [illegible]. In 13,35 [illegible] may be read in F1, although the [illegible] looks very like a [illegible]; both copies have [illegible].

E1 cannot be a copy of Pt1, for the peculiar numbering of Fargards which begins with the Bahirâm Yasht and which is found, with the exception of F1, only in E1, is wanting in Pt1. In addition to this, the list of instances in which the Âsadin Ms. alone can be the cause of the misunderstanding, may be extended specially as regards E1.

At 13,98 in F1 the [illegible] of [illegible] is made too small and straight; E1 makes of this [illegible]. At 13,148 F1 apparently had originally [illegible], but [illegible] corrected pr. m. to [illegible]. The transcriber misread this correction and copied [illegible]. At 13,99 the [illegible] in [illegible] is written so close to the [illegible] that for the hasty reader it looks like [illegible] in ligature; E1 has [illegible]. In 9,18 F1 has [illegible], and above [illegible] an [illegible] is written; E1 [illegible], Pt1 [illegible]. In 14,28 F1 and E1 have [illegible], and [illegible] added above as a correction.

The corrections which run through the entire Ms. F1, and which are evidently due to different reviewers, are partly made use of in E1. At Yt. 16,1 F1 has pr. m. [illegible] [illegible], sec. m. and E1 [illegible]. In 16,2 there is legible in F1 from the first hand only [illegible] .. [illegible], and at ... a very marked erasure, above it stands sec. m. [illegible]; E1 has [illegible]. At 16,6 F1 has pr. m. [illegible], [illegible] added sec. m.; E1 has [illegible].

Just as little can Pt1 be copied from E1, but rather it presupposes F1 in most Yashts as its immediate antecedent, as the following instances show: Yt. 8,17 the line ends in F1 with [illegible] and the following begins with [illegible], [illegible] therefore has accidentally dropped out, Pt1 [illegible]. 13,38 F1 has [illegible] (so E1), but the top of [illegible] is somewhat heavily marked; Pt1 [illegible]. 13,148 F1 and E1 [illegible], [illegible] in F1 are erased or accidentally damaged; Pt1 [illegible] 13,93 F1 [illegible]; likewise Pt1 (L18, P13). 17,21 F1 [illegible] [illegible], the punctuation mark very close to [illegible]; Pt1 makes of it [illegible] [illegible]. 8,11 F1, E1 [illegible], to the right of [illegible] in F1, however, a slight ink splash; Pt1 [illegible]. 9,8 F1 has [illegible], but above the line [illegible] added as correction and the caret erroneously inserted between [illegible] and [illegible]; Pt1 [illegible]. 10,30 F1 pr. m. and Pt1 read [illegible]. 10,90 F1 in [illegible] has the [illegible] and [illegible] crowded together; Pt1 [illegible]. Likewise the parent manuscript at 13,72 in [illegible] has the [illegible] and [illegible] so close together that [illegible] at first glance looks like [illegible]; Pt1 [illegible]. Most palpable is the following case: Yt. 13,37 in F1 the [illegible] in [illegible] has run into the long drawn-out tail of the [illegible] in [illegible] of the preceding line, so that [illegible] looks like [illegible]. The copyist of Pt1 read it so and wrote [illegible]

The lack of uniformity in the relation between Pt1 and F1 in different portions of the text was for a long time very troublesome to me, and led me at first to believe that Pt1 and F1 were two independent sister manuscripts, until I discovered the real state of the case. The copyist of Pt1 at first took as the basis of his copy one or more Khorda Avestâ Mss., but completed the Yashts by drawing also upon F1. The Yashts which stood in his original source, namely, the Khorda Avestâ, he took from that copy instead of from the far more solid Âsadin manuscripts. The relation of F1 to E1-Pt1 may now be thus represented in detail. The Nyâishes in E1 are probably copied from F1 but are influenced by the Vulgate; in Pt1 on the contrary they are taken from the Khorda Avestâ copy. Yashts 1-3 in E1 and Pt1 descend from a common original, related to F1 but not identical with it.[1] Beginning with Yasht 4, E1 is based throughout upon F1; but in Pt1 the Ms. F1 is the basis only in Yashts 5-8. 10-13. 15. 17-19,[2] whereas Yasht 4. 9. 14. 16, the favorite Yashts of the Khorda Avestâ, follow another tradition.

A transcript or an excerpt from E1 is the little Yasht collection in K16. In this the copyist has partly incorporated the corrections which were made in E1 by the second hand. The following comparisons will make the relation clear:

	F1:	E1. K16[1]:
Yt. 16,15	[illegible]	[illegible]

(above [illegible] there is [illegible] added as correction)

16,19	[illegible]	[illegible]
16,10	[illegible]	[illegible]
14,15	[illegible]	[illegible]

([illegible] after [illegible] added sec. m. as correction)

14,21	[illegible]	[illegible]

([illegible] inserted sec. m.)

ib.	[illegible]	[illegible]

([illegible] inserted sec. m.)

14,53	[illegible]	[illegible]
14,43	[illegible]	[illegible]
15,20	[illegible]	[illegible]
15,21	[illegible]	[illegible]

14,41 F1 and E1 have pr. m. [illegible], E1 sec. m. and K16 with the Vulgate [illegible]; 14,12 F1 and E1 pr. m. [illegible], sec. m. [illegible] and so K16; 14,13 F1. E1 pr. m. [illegible], E1 sec. m. K16 [illegible]; 14,56 E1 sec. m. and K16 pr. m. have the addition [illegible] etc.; 16,3 E1 has [illegible] added sec. m., K16 has this addition pr. m. In 14,39 the development of the reading is:

F1	[illegible]
E1 pr. m.	[illegible]
E1 sec. m.	[illegible]
K16	[illegible]

A second transcript of E1 is the Yasht excerpt which forms the latter part of K15 and contains the Tîr and the Mihir Yasht. Readings are:

	F1:	E1. K15:
10,26	[illegible]	[illegible]

(above [illegible] the [illegible] as correction)

10,21	[illegible]	[illegible]
10,125	[illegible]	[illegible]
10,24	[illegible]	[illegible]
10,101	[illegible]	[illegible]
10,9	[illegible]	[illegible]

(the first [illegible] in F1 struck out and [illegible] above it as correction)

---

[1] It must be remembered that in E1 the Âfringâns stand between the Nyâishes and the Yashts. In the case of the Âfringâns, the copyist must at all events have made use of another source for they are not found in F1 at all. With regard to the first three Yashts the following evidences may suffice:

	F1:	Pt1:	E1:
Yt. 1,27	[illegible]		[illegible]
1,29	[illegible]		[illegible]
1,19	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
2,12	[illegible]	[illegible]
ib.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
2,13	[illegible]	[illegible]
3,4	[illegible]	[illegible]
3,5	[illegible]	[illegible]

[2] The last two Yashts are so unimportant that they may practically be left out of account. Also the Srôsh Yasht with Y. 57 complete (Yt. 11 a), is copied in Pt1 from F1. Yt. 11 in F1 is already much influenced by the Vulgate.

[1] K16 itself has been extensively corrected after Persian manuscripts. Only the readings pr. m. come here into consideration.

	F1:	E1. K15:
10,30	[illegible]	[illegible][1]
	(i corrected to [illegible])
10,136	[illegible]	[illegible], [illegible]
10,66	[illegible]	[illegible]

The three words [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] 8,17 stand in E1 as in K15 sec. m. in marg. The four missing words in 10,80 in F1 (and Pt1) are supplied in E1 in marg. and copied thence into K15 pr. m.; so also the four words omitted in F1 at 10,67. In 10,125 E1, K15 insert [illegible] against F1. At 10,18 E1 has [illegible] corrected sec. m. to [illegible]; K15 accordingly [illegible].

More numerous is the progeny of Pt1. The Mss. L18 and P13 are offspring of it. In the latter the Yasht collection has remained incomplete, the Ms. moreover is much more carelessly written than L18.

In Pt1-L18-P13 are wanting 13,140 [illegible][2], 13,37 [illegible][2], 8,5 [illegible][2], 8,2 three words.[3]

	F1:	Pt1. L18. P13:
10,61	[illegible][4]	[illegible]
5,130	[illegible]	[illegible]
10,104	[illegible]	[illegible]
13,123	[illegible]	[illegible]
10,121	[illegible]	[illegible]
13,88	[illegible][5]	[illegible]

In 14,29 all three read [illegible]. 10,62 F1. Pt1. L18 uniformly [6][illegible]; P13 has made of this [7][illegible]. At 10,81 F1 has [illegible], likewise Pt1; but in this [illegible] is twisted into a ligature which resembles [illegible] [illegible]. L18 makes out of this [illegible], P13 [illegible]. 13,95 the line ends in Pt1 with [illegible] and the following begins with [illegible], so that [illegible] has fallen out; L18 has [illegible] [illegible], P13 [illegible]. 10,130 Pt1 has quite rightly [illegible], but a peculiar cross-stroke is added to the [illegible]; L18 makes of this [illegible] [illegible], P13 [illegible] [illegible].

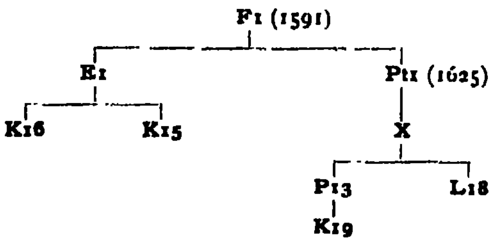
On the other hand, L18 and P13 cannot be copied directly from Pt1, for they have certain mistakes in common which Pt1 does not share; to these belong the loss of three words in 10,75, the omission in 13,35.119, the absence of [illegible] in 13,123, the defective substitution of the words missing in Pt1 at 10,80, the dittography of [illegible] in 13,136, the repetition of the words [illegible] as far as [illegible] in 5,102. There was therefore either an intermediate copy between L18-P13 and Pt1, or P13 is transcribed from L18. The latter, however, is not likely.

A third descendant of Pt1 is K19, of which only a fragment has been preserved.

In Pt1, L18, P13, K19 at 5,13 [illegible] is wanting; in L18, P13, K19 Yt. 5,8.33 two words each. All three read at 5,2 [illegible], 5,6 [illegible], 5,21 [illegible] [illegible]. Of the two, however, K19 stands nearer to the Paris Ms. than to the London, and is probably copied from P13.

	L18:	P13. K19:
5,7	deest	[illegible]
ib.	[illegible]	[illegible]
ib.	[illegible] [illegible]	[illegible] [illegible]
5,6	[illegible] [illegible]	[illegible] [illegible]
5,3	[illegible]	[illegible]
5,13	[illegible]	[illegible]
5,26	deest	[illegible]

The family tree of this entire group of manuscripts may now be clearly represented as follows:



To this group belongs also the small Yasht collection H3. It is probably to be placed under E1; cf. 10,60 n. 4; 104 n. 7; 125 n. 4 and 8.[1] I have been as little successful in assigning to this Ms. its exact position in the genealogical table as in the case of H4. The much corrupted text of H4 appears partly to come from a quite different and unknown source.[2] I have also not been able to make out from what source is derived the modern transcript K40 which is related to H4.

---

[1] The scribe was therefore of opinion that the correction refers to [illegible], and not simply to [illegible].

[2] stands in F1.

[3] The gap in 8,24 only in Pt1-L18, but filled up in P13.

[4] [illegible] in F1 looks very like an [illegible].

[5] [illegible] in F1 is joined as a ligature, hence the mistake.

[6] Evidently a slight mistake of Âsadîn.

[7] The case is significant for the pronunciation of [illegible].

[1] 10,80 n. 4 H3 after Pt1 is to be struck out. H3, E1 read like K15. —10,86 n. 4 H3 is to be read instead of the first P13.

[2] H4 is probably a transcript of a manuscript that was not accessible to me but which Darmesteter made use of and designated as Jm4; the notes, however, which he gives regarding readings are not sufficient to allow me to assign the Ms. its definite position.

Nearly the entire transmission of most of the Yasht texts culminates in the one Ms. F1. In this respect the codex remains unique. Whatever Âsadin did not correctly read or copy from the Ms. that lay before him—irrespective of course of slight errors—is irrevocably lost. Âsadin, however, was in general a conscientious copyist. His carefully indicating the gaps he found in his original towards the end of the Ms. bears witness to this.[1] Taken as a whole his text appears to be still fairly intact; it is only in the case of those Yashts which belong also to the circle of the Khorda Avestâ, as in the fourteenth Yasht, that he is infected by the Vulgate. On the other hand, F1 has contributed much to the emendation of this very Yasht. In general not a single one of the maiden manuscripts has furnished such a number of new readings as the Âsadin manuscript.[2]

In the days of the copyist of E1 there must have existed for the entire Yashts[3] another source beside F1. The accidental omissions of Âsadin and the damaged places in his original which he indicated by leaving an exactly commensurate vacant space, are partly supplied in E1, sometimes pr. m., sometimes sec. m. Attention has already been called to the fact that the scribes in all probability did not have a memorized text of the great Yashts beside their written text, upon which they could draw for such restorations. The four words missing in Yt. 10,20 are supplied in E1 on the margin. The gaps which F1 shows in Yt. 19,48 and 49 are filled up in E1 quite correctly pr. m.; so also in 19,77, and by a second hand in 19,96 (the third time), and by both hands in 94. The restoration in 19,51 is probably approximately correct, so also the second restoration in 67; on the contrary, the first in 67 and the first and second in 96 are failures. These restorations in the nineteenth Yasht agree almost exactly with the text given in J10.[1] J10, which is a codex about comparable with Pt1 in extent and contents, belongs in respect to the Yashts to a side line of the F1 family. This side line in its ascent appears to go still further back than F1.[2] According to J10 we must assume a great omission in F1 and its kin at the beginning of Yt. 17,10.[3] The text which J10 offers in this passage bears a thoroughly original stamp. The omission must therefore be probably laid to Âsadin's account, and he went astray by passing from the first to the second [illegible]. In 10,28 J10 has [illegible], the F1 family [illegible] In Yt. 19,42 the gap is also designated in J10. If the other restorations in J10 be also taken into account, one arrives at the conclusion that J10 goes back ultimately to a second and older copy from the original of F1 which was made at a time when the corruption of the original had not yet advanced so far as in Âsadin's day.[4] This older copy was probably used in places for the corrections in E1. Between this older copy and J10, however, there were probably many intermediate links which were influenced by the other line, and the text in J10 is accordingly considerably impaired but it is useful, off and on, for checking and correcting F1. It is probable that the transcript of the nineteenth Yasht which was made for Westergaard and which he designated as D, was derived from the original of J10. To the F1 group, as may be inferred from certain omissions, belongs also the Ms. K12;[5] its predecessors, however, appear to have been corrected in places according to Mss. of the side line. In respect to text, however, K12 stands upon the lowest level; many words are disfigured almost beyond recognition.—The majority of the Yasht Mss., therefore, may be traced back to one single ancestral manuscript which is still preserved; all, in fact, to a lost archetype which was not far removed from this.

[2] In the Yashts the reading of F1 itself should at times have been set into the text instead of that of a second or third rate copy, e. g. [illegible] 10,137; [illegible] 13,104. In general it would be well in doubtful cases always to keep to this standard codex. I should now give preference to the readings [illegible] 5,7; [illegible] (i. e. [illegible]) 5,11; [illegible] 14,12; [illegible] 19,38; [illegible] (i. e. [illegible]) 17,15, and to several others. Somewhat different is the case where a later copyist in accordance with the general rules has removed a slight mistake in the original, especially in orthography. This case is by no means rare and under such circumstances the editor is bound according to orthographic principles to give the copy apparently the preference to the original. Thus at 5,34 F1 reads [illegible], the edition, however, with L18 gives the usual form [illegible]; 10,27 F1 [illegible], the edition with Pt1 [illegible] F1 sometimes writes [illegible], whereas Pt1 restores the more correct form [illegible]. In Yt 5,1 [illegible] is required according to Y. 65,1, although it is supported only by the later copies P13, K19, whereas the ancestral manuscript has [illegible]

[3] For Yt. 13 an Iranian manuscript has also been made use of sec. m. in E1, e. g. 120 n. 6, 123 n. 2, 127 n. 1.

[1] e. g. instead of the missing [illegible] in 96 E1 pr. m. [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] added sec. m., J10 [illegible]; E1 instead of [illegible] ib. [illegible], so also J10. In 67 F1 has ···· [illegible], E1 makes of this [illegible], J10 has [illegible]

[2] The sixteenth Yasht shows evident traces of the relationship; I refer to [illegible] in 16,2 and [illegible] in 16,3.

[3] Conversely in J10 the entire Par. 9 has fallen out.

[4] It is striking that at Yt. 10,20 five words more are left out in J10 than in F1. It is hard to say where we are to look for the source of the error.

[5] Cf. e. g. Yt. 10,20.

Although in the case of the Yasht Mss. and the combined Mss., the general relations are clearly established, it is no longer possible to bring any order into the mass of the Khorda Avestâs proper. These have been produced apparently in India as in Persia in considerable numbers during the last two centuries. They vary much in compass. Hardly two Mss. are to be found which agree exactly in contents and arrangement. Their composition depended upon the pleasure of the copyists, who probably for the most part availed themselves of material from various sources. So much only can be said, that both of the Khorda Avestâs with Neryosangh's Sanskrit translation, J9 and H2, and the two with Bhâshâ translation, L9 and Mb2, stand very close together. With few exceptions those pieces of text that really contain the least matter were the ones that were most in favour with the Khorda Avestâ copyists. In spite of the mass of manuscripts the restoration of the text has been but little furthered by these; a low estimate may be put upon the critical value of most of the manuscripts. An exception which lends a ray of sunshine amid the dreary work of collating and examining the Khorda Avestâ Mss., is made by the Mss. of Iranian extraction. These stand in the same relation to the Indian ones as the Vendidâd sâdas of the two countries stand to each other; and beside being better prepared than the Indian manuscripts, they also presuppose a more solid written and oral tradition. For those Yashts, therefore, which are selected by preference for the Khorda Avestâs, we have a threefold transmission: (1) the Yasht transmission proper in India, represented by F1; (2) the Persian source; (3) the Vulgate of the Indian Khorda Avestâs. These three transmissions stand in an analogous relation to each other to that in which the three sources of the Vendîdâd stand. The Yasht transmission proper answers in this case to the Pahlavî Vendidâd in the latter. As the Pahlavî Vendidâd is more nearly related to the Persian Vendidâd sâda, so F1 in many respects stands nearer to the Persian than to the Indian. The fourteenth Yasht is particularly instructive for textual criticism.

Again, M4, e. g. in Yt. 14, presupposes a separate source. It occupies an intermediate position between F1 and the Persian manuscripts. Of primary importance among the Persian manuscripts of the Khorda Avestâ are F2, Mf3, K36, K38; of secondary importance are K18a, K37, W1, W3, Pd, Kh2, L25, Lb5, Lb16.[1]

The favorite Yasht of the Iranian Khorda Avestâs is the Fravardîn Yasht (13), which was lost in the Indian Khorda Avestâ transmission. The Ms. K13 was specially prepared in order to make good this deficiency.[2] H5 is a careless copy of K13. It becomes evident precisely in this Yasht that the Iranian Yasht transmission and the Indian Yasht transmission represented by F1, form two equivalent factors for the criticism of the text. The same is true in the case of Yt. 14, but in far less degree of Yt. 3.

A complete Iranian collection of the Yashts has not yet made its appearance. The only manuscript that might perhaps make any such claim is the great collective manuscript Ml2, the value of which, however, is a priori impaired by its being transcribed into the utterly inadequate Modern Persian alphabet. Yet certain Yashts, like the thirteenth and sixteenth, are wanting in Ml2, and the rest appear to have been compiled from multifarious sources. In cases where the Iranian and the Indian manuscripts stand opposed to each other, as in the fourteenth Yasht, Ml2 follows the Iranian. But the remainder points to Indian origin, to a manuscript near akin to J10.[3]

Taking it as a whole, the text of the Avestâ books, apart from mutilation by copyists, is the same in all manuscripts, as far as the order of the sentences and the words is concerned. In the case of connected texts, the exceptions to this rule are insignificant.[1] The difference in Vd. 15,19, slight as it is, is something quite unusual. Only certain small pieces which are composed of mere formulas, especially the first Nyâish, show traces of a double recension, an Indian and an Iranian. In the one recension of the first Nyâish, entire sentences have dropped out, are transposed, or are replaced by others. The first Yasht is preserved in a shorter and in a longer form, and the supplement in the latter is again in a double form. On the other hand, the radical differences in Yt. 3 and 16, and also in Yt. 14 and 11, are not really due to a difference in recension, but are occasioned by a marked and one-sided corruption, in a single class of manuscripts, of what was originally the same text, and these differences concern far more the single words than the context. Elsewhere in cases where certain Mss. indicate additions, these are for the most part glosses that have crept into the text from the Pahlavî or the Sanskrit commentary. In the Pahlavî translation they are for the most part designated as such. Sometimes, however, it is difficult to distinguish gloss from original text. My endeavour has been as far as possible to free the text from these embarrassing additions, and in this endeavour I had the support principally of the Persian manuscripts which are almost free from glosses.

[1] Some of these may have been copied in India from Iranian originals.

[2] Cf. the remarks above under K13. The incident there told shows how little the Khorda Avestâ transmission was in touch with the Yasht transmission, for at the time of Jâmâsp and Rustamji, the thirteenth Yasht was in existence in the Indian Yasht manuscripts.

[3] At Yt. 19,51 the variants re-transcribed would read [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]; J10 has exactly this. The restorations in Yt. 19 agree wholly with J10.

The higher criticism has therefore only a slight field of activity in the Avestâ. The attempt to distinguish between what is old and what is new in the remnants preserved in the final Sassanian redaction of the Avestâ canon, is a hopeless undertaking. An edition of the text must be kept free from any such attempt. Its sole effort must be to arrive at the stage of the ultimate and final redaction of the text, which took place, in part at least, a considerable time after the last Yezdegerd. In many cases, even this will remain an unattainable ideal, for we are obliged to rest content with what the manuscripts authenticate.

So much the more is there opportunity, however, for the lower text criticism in the Avestâ. The form of single words fluctuates in the Mss., sometimes more, sometimes less. The method which I followed in reconstructing the text, or to speak frankly, the method which I acquired, like Westergaard, in the course of the work, cannot be comprehended under short general rules. The chief principle of all textual criticism, to take as a basis the oldest Ms. of that class of Mss. which is recognized as the best, and with all possible consistency to make this authoritative in the edition, could be carried out in the present case only with great limitations. Although for the Yasna it must unquestionably be acknowledged that the Pahlavî manuscripts are the first authority, still in some respects there is a certain peculiarity with regard to this authority. The family is divided into two lines, the one of which has the advantage of far greater antiquity; the other, manifestly, the advantage of the more solid copyists. And both these lines are found to be in incessant antagonism with each other. Even within this narrow compass, therefore, an eclectic course is unavoidable. The experience acquired in the Yasna in regard to the value of the Mitrô-âpân manuscripts and as to the relation of the Hôshâng line to the Persian manuscripts, gave in general a clew with reference to the relation in the Vendîdâd. Here the two incomplete Mss. of Mitrô-âpân are the only old representatives of the first class. Even if we grant that his source for the Vendîdâd may have been a little better than for the Yasna (at least for K5), still, the two Mss. together would give no readable text without continual correction by means of the Vendîdâd sâdas, especially the Persian. For the great Yashts, from the fifth onward, F1 gives a firm backbone, and the task is here a simple one, for there is seldom cogent reason for material departure from the sample codex.[1] The case is different where, alongside of F1, the Persian transmission lends itself to comparison. It then becomes evident that implicit trust may not be placed in F1; in which connection, however, the special circumstances mentioned on p. xliv must be taken into account.

The meaning, so far as we are in position at present to understand it, the testimony of the Pahlavî translation, parallels, repetitions, and formulas, all these implements employed in textual criticism, compel an eclectic but cautious drawing upon all manuscript classes even where one among them has the acknowledged precedence. All classes of manuscripts have their stronger and their weaker points, their conservative tendences alongside of special inclinations to certain faults. In this respect also the various copyists must be judged individually.[1] It is necessary only to compare the repetition of a Gâthâ strophe with the original passage, or in a similar manner the text of one of the formulaic reiterations in the Vendîdâd, in order to become convinced how little consistent even the manuscripts to which priority is granted, often are.

[1] The abbreviations and abridgments of the Pahlavî translator are not to be regarded as real differences in text.

[1] In regard to unnecessary departures from F1 see note on p. xliv.

In Y. 50,7 J2, K5 read ·[illegible], Pt4, Mf4 ·[illegible]; but in 64,3 J2, Pt4, Mf4 ·[illegible], K5 ·[illegible].—At Vd. 13,20-23 the same formulaic question and answer is four times repeated. Westergaard in both sentences uniformly reads ·[illegible], but not at all in harmony with K1-L4, which offer in all seven different forms, and contradict each other almost every time. This decided fluctuation immediately gave me the idea that it was the coming into play of two different forms that made Mitrô-âpân confused, as was often the case. Mf2 reads [illegible] throughout in the question, and ·[illegible] in the answer; L2 reads ·[illegible] in the former and ·[illegible] or ·[illegible] in the latter. Here at least is consistency. I have therefore followed the best Vendîdâd sâdas of both groups. In the choice of ·[illegible], however, I made my decision in consideration of Vd. 4,5 seq. and in accordance with my general observations in regard to the interchange of ·[illegible] and [illegible] in the manuscripts. In the absence of other criteria it was simply the consistency of one class of manuscripts that had weight with me, e. g. in Vd. 14,5; 18,73 where with Westergaard I took up into the text ·[illegible] after the Vendîdâd sâdas as against K1-L4. The latter fluctuate between ·[illegible] (Vd. 14,5) and [illegible] ·[illegible] (18,73). The mistake of writing [illegible] for [illegible], [illegible] is just as possible as the reverse case, so far as itself is concerned, cf. ·[illegible]—·[illegible] Vd. 13,35; ·[illegible]—·[illegible] Vd. 16,2.

The selection of this or of that reading has for the most part been made only after weighing the particular case individually and with the guidance also of experience and of a certain feeling which comes only after long-continued study of multifarious manuscripts. That I have made mistakes I have myself later recognized and shall hereafter more often find others.

There are, especially, two influences at work which tend to detract from the fidelity of the manuscripts. On the one hand, the copyists knew the majority of their texts by heart. The oral text, however, had become more corrupted than the written text and keeps constantly crossing the latter. Scribes who read and copied word for word from the text before them, ran less danger than those scribes who grasped the entire sentence and wrote it off before looking again at the copy before them. To the latter class Mitrô-âpân evidently belongs. On the other hand, many users of manuscripts had a bad habit of collating their manuscript with some other copy which often stood in absolutely no immediate connection with their own, as far as kinship is concerned, and then of correcting according to this.[2] The next copyist wrote down sometimes the original reading, sometimes the correction, just as it might occur to him. In K9, which is otherwise a very good copy of Mf2, we can see how the text in some places has suffered in this way. Both these influences tend to obliterate all sharply defined boundary lines. After a certain lapse of time the good old reading gradually dies out under the influence of the Vulgate, without distinction as to class. Sometimes it is preserved in one or two manuscripts alone.

In Vd. 13,35 it is only L4 that still reads ·[illegible] quite correctly in harmony with the P.V. The Ms. K1 has at least [illegible]. But in both the Vendîdâd sâda classes as well as in the transcripts from L4 and K1, the reading appears as ·[illegible] (in Ml3 ·[illegible]). The way in which the Vulgate gradually crowds its way to the front is made clear by an example from Vd. 22,5. I arrange the readings according to their antiquity:

·[illegible] L4
·[illegible] K1 ·[illegible] (Pers. Vds.)
[illegible] L1.2. Br1.

The old reading represented by L4 stands over against a double Vulgate: [illegible] for [illegible] occasioned by the preceding ·[illegible], and d for t. The one Vulgate has established itself in K1, the other in the Persian manuscripts; while in the later Indian Vendîdâd sâdas both appear simultaneously. In Vd. 5,42.54; 8,38 the later [illegible] has gradually crowded out the older ·[illegible] in all classes, but most radically in the Indian Vendîdâd sâdas.

In this connection I might not neglect to draw attention to an observation that may be of service in many places. There is a tendency in general for words to grow longer as the corruption advances.

[1] Here, for example, belongs the case ·[illegible]—·[illegible] in Y. 34,5.

[2] These corrections, furthermore, are in earlier times the only obtrusive instances of a desire on the part of the scribes for improving. Apart from single attempts in earlier times, the epoch of greater text-revisions began in India in the third decade of the last century with the appearance of Jamasp (cf. Anquetil i, 2 p. 326). On the other hand, the Persian revision of the Vendîdâd sâda must be considered as a thoroughly conscientious revision, based upon manuscript authority.

[illegible], [illegible], [illegible] is the ordinary line of gradation. So are to be judged: [illegible]—[illegible] [illegible] Vd. 9,11; [illegible]—[illegible] Yt. 14,21; [illegible]—[illegible] Y. 44,12; [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 9,39; 19,26. Certain consonants show a preference for parasitic sounds in their vicinity: [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 7,25; [illegible]—[illegible] Y. 44,20. The Mss. fall into the opposite error when two identical or similar syllables directly follow each other. The well-known tendency of the Avestâ language thus acts further upon the copyists: [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 18,68; [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 7,43; [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 6,10.

An important aid in textual criticism is the Pahlavî translation. This was deserving of still more attention for the Yasna.[1] I now acknowledge without hesitation that my standpoint with regard to the native commentaries was at first a wrong one. The earlier low opinion which I shared with others in regard to this work has given place as my labours advanced to an ever increasing high esteem. I have West to thank above all for my conversion. It was this unrivalled master of the Pahlavî who with magnetic power first led me away from error and brought me into the right path through his many letters which often were veritable 'essays' and which form an inexhaustible store of valuable information.

The importance of the Pahlavî translation for reconstructing a correct text must, indeed, be modified in two directions. The different translations are very unequal, less in respect to age and transmission than in regard to their intrinsic value and the knowledge of the translators. At the head stands the Vendidâd translation; second comes the Pahlavî translation of the Yasna and of the Khorda Avestâ. But to the modern translations based upon the Pahlavî translation great mistrust, on the other hand, attaches.

According to the Persian translation [illegible] would have to be read in Âfr. 3,4 instead of [illegible].[2] But the reading [illegible] is attested by the Persian manuscripts, which have a particularly delicate touch in orthographic matters; it is further supported by the passage, Y. 35,1; and finally it is substantiated by the Pahlavî translation in F2. The latter translates [illegible] by the same word as [illegible] in the Yasna passage.

Furthermore, in the case of nine tenths of all the variants, the Pahlavî translation cannot be placed in the scale, because the textual variations, in question, are of an orthographic or a grammatical nature. Variants in which the question is one of sense are not so common, and these are the ones in which the Pahlavî translation is naturally most authoritative.

Such variae lectiones are: [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 5,38; [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 13,28; [illegible]—[illegible] Y. 48,10; [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 5,59; [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 1,9; [illegible]—[illegible] Y. 32,15; [illegible]—[illegible] Y. 43,10. The P.V. is indirectly decisive in the case of [illegible]—[illegible] Y. 43,14.[1] It is conclusive in the case of [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 9,47; but not in the case of variants like [illegible]—[illegible] Vd. 7,2, because only one Pahlavî equivalent is used for both words. Still less competent is the testimony it can give in the case of the constant fluctuation in the Gâthâs between [illegible] and [illegible]. I question whether the translator of the Yasna was in position clearly to justify himself in regard to the distinction between [illegible], [illegible] and the like.[2]

In regard to questions of detail, the Pahlavî translation cannot be fully serviceable until we have very exact Avestâ-Pahlavî and Pahlavî-Avestâ indexes prepared, and before a new edition of the translation itself is accessible.[3]

Its character in general is that of an interlinear version; the translation for the most part is made word for word; more rare it is, that the version paraphrases in a somewhat free manner. In matters, where the genuineness of one or more words comes into question, its testimony should therefore be important.

It makes clear in this manner that in Vd. 9,52 the words [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], which stand only in K1, L4, are a blunder of Rûstam or of his predecessor. But at Y. 71,9, three Mss., J2, K5 among the number, insert a [illegible] into the Avestâ text. The word is translated in J2, and probably also in K5, but Pt4 does not recognize the word either in the text or in the translation. In Y. 12,9 the Mss. Pt4, Mf4 insert a

---

[1] With the P.V. is to be read e. g. [illegible] instead of [illegible] in Y. 34,1; 44,18.

[2] Cf. Darmesteter, Études Iraniennes ii, 331.

[1] Neryosangh, however, has [illegible] in view and translates it by mahyam.

[2] For similar reasons in Y. 34,5a (last word) I would not abandon the better attested reading on account of the Pahlavî version. Perhaps the Pahlavî translator himself misread this word, that is [illegible] instead of [illegible]. One need not transcribe [illegible] into the Pahlavî script—which has been palæographically very much misused—, but simply to turn it only into the old ligature script of the Avestâ to comprehend how the misunderstanding arose.

[3] I refer to Vd. 7,78 n. 1.

[illegible], which is wanting in the others. J2, Pt4, Mf4 translate the word, but K5, judging from Spiegel's edition, and Neryosangh do not translate it. Our witness, therefore, in some cases leaves us in the lurch.

Not a few words of the Avestâ text are not expressed in the Pahlavî translation at all, in spite of their being vouched for by all Avestâ manuscripts.[1] In such instances I have not ventured for a moment to throw any doubt on their genuineness. The Pahlavî equivalent may have been omitted through oversight on the part of the translator or by a copyist, for we must not lose sight of the fact that the manuscript transmission of the Pahlavî translations rests upon a still weaker foothold than does that of the original text. Sometimes the translator seems to have had under his eye a different reading from that in our manuscripts.[2] The text in his time was probably not altogether free from variant readings. In this case also I should prefer not to correct the text simply upon his authority as against the testimony of all manuscripts, unless for some special reason of weight. I have refrained as far as possible from conjectural criticism[3] and have preferred to offer that which was only half right rather than that which is wholly uncertain.[4]

It seems to me hazardous to call upon the P.V. in the following case: many clauses, especially of the Vendidâd text, are found only in the Vendidâd sâda, and not in the Pahlavî Vendidâd; these are, therefore, either an interpolation in the one after the manner of the glosses, or they are omitted in the other by oversight. The absence of translation seems to speak against their genuineness. In this respect we could have no better control over the Avestâ text than the translation, if the latter had only been transmitted independently of the former. But such is not the case. The Pahlavî commentary is always imbedded in the Avestâ text. The latter is cut up into small sentences, to each of which the commentary is directly appended. The falling out of one of these may easily have involved the loss of the other. There are kindred cases which must be kept in view. It does not always happen that the text and the scholia belonging to it are uniformly missing in L4 and K1, or in their representatives Ml3, Pt2, where the old manuscripts are defective. Thus, for example, in Vd. 3,27; 19,45[1], the missing parts in the two versions often do not exactly coincide. In Vd. 13,47; 15,8, and often, an Avestâ sentence is missing together with the P.V. of the preceding,[2] whereas the translation of the missing Avestâ sentence stands. If to this be added the fact that other sentences or parts of sentences are missing only in the Pahlavî translation (e.g. 19,30.45) or only in the Avestâ text (e.g. 3,32; 13,48; 14,1), or again, that other clauses with or without P.V. are sometimes wanting only in L4, sometimes only in K1, sometimes only in the copies of K1 (e.g. Vd. 16,2), then, the conclusion is inevitable that this mingling together of Avestâ and Pahlavî was particularly favorable to misleading the eye. Consequent omissions occurred, and the instances first mentioned, in the case of which alone there can be any question as to genuineness, are to be regarded simply as oversights of the copyists. If examined more closely, it becomes evident that most of the passages are those in which a similarity of sound, the same word at the beginning or end of two adjoining sentences, caused the copyist, to skip over, e.g. at 3,27. The genuineness is often proved indirectly. In the case of the missing clause in the P.V. at 8,95, the corresponding number is handed down in both versions. In Vd. 8,8, the P.V. gives no equivalent for the words [illegible] as far as [illegible] [illegible], but the added explanations of the expositor presuppose the presence of the words. Thus in every instance, errors of the copyists! It is needless to say that the connection of the sentence comes also into consideration; and, furthermore, that the numerous small repetitions[1] which are scattered through the text in the Vendidâd sâda, as opposed to the Pahlavî Vendidâd, do not fall under this category.

[1] e.g. [illegible] Vd. 13,8; [illegible] 14,13; cf. Vd. 1,19 n. 4; 7,35 n. 2 and 4 and often.

[2] e.g. Vd. 4,1 n. 5.—A crux for the editor is the frequent wavering of the Mss. between [illegible] and [illegible]. The translation for the most part keeps the two separate and is decisive in doubtful cases, e.g. Vd. 18,19. In Vd. 5,42.43, however, where [illegible] is unanimously transmitted, the translator appears to have had [illegible] in his eye. Even here I did not venture to make a change.

[3] Except Y. 12,5 n. 1 and a few other instances where I have followed Westergaard, as Vd. 13,49.—In spite of what is said on p. xxvi in regard to Y. 10,4, I should even now hesitate to take [illegible] up into the text, inasmuch as the reading is not positively attested.

[4] Slight emendations were, of course, unavoidable, e.g. [illegible] Yt. 13,75, where only [illegible] and [illegible] are attested; [illegible] Yt. 13,72 out of [illegible] and [illegible]; [illegible] Vd. 14,6 out of [illegible] and [illegible].

[1] For further examples, see p. xviii.

[2] The large piece in 7,75 is wanting only in K1, not in Pt2. The first four words of the paragraph, although standing in the Avestâ text of K1, are missing in its P.V.; on the contrary, the last four words of the original text which is missing in K1, are nevertheless translated.

Among the many difficulties in which the Pahlavî translation can offer no assistance, I shall mention only one more. It is the fluctuation between active and middle forms.

Almost every form in [illegible] has variants in [illegible] beside it. The Persian Mss. go to the extreme in their preference for [illegible]; they have in fact for the most part also [illegible]. Certain Indian Mss., on the contrary, prefer [illegible] everywhere. As a proof that the composers of the better Avestâ texts were still fairly certain as to the distinction between the two voices, Vd. 13,19 may be cited. In the subtile differentiation between [illegible], [illegible] the Vendidâd sâdas at least are almost unanimous. In general, however, it is possible to draw a sharp line of distinction only where the idiom of the language is established by means of other forms. The uncompounded root stâ is inflected in the middle voice: [illegible], [illegible], which indicates [illegible] accordingly. In composition, however, it is frequently active, e. g. with us. Accordingly the correct reading at Vd. 4,17 is [illegible]

In matters of orthography I shall, least of all, have satisfied very exacting demands. The lack of a native grammar has been especially felt in the question of correct spelling. The manuscripts in this respect present a very motley appearance and much of this polychromatic effect has passed into the edition. I have not hesitated to accept peculiar spellings like [illegible], [illegible] where they were either well or exclusively authenticated. A number of odd spellings which I have relegated to the apparatus should have been received into the text. In general, however, I have tried to be as consistent as possible without doing too much violence to the text as transmitted. Questionable cases must here also be individually judged.

Thus in Y. 55,3; 58,4; Vp. 21,3 I have written [illegible] and have not written now [illegible] and again [illegible]; for only one form can be correct, and [illegible] is always attested, if not always equally well. Likewise in Vd. 19,20 41 I have always written [illegible], for in this the Indian Vendidâd sâdas at least allow a consistent spelling. The same is true of [illegible], alongside of which [illegible] is found as variant, and in fact well authenticated.[1] On the other hand, at Yt. 10,14 I read [illegible] with [illegible], but in Vd. 1,4 [illegible] with [illegible], because the Mss. in the one case and in the other read only thus. This may be called pedantry, but what passage did I have, according to which I could correct the other? I have not eliminated slight orthographic differences like, [illegible] by the side of [illegible], especially where the good Mss. offer the first form. In the constant variation of the Mss. between [illegible], [illegible] and [illegible], and [illegible], [illegible], I had to decide in favor of one particular spelling. The form [illegible] is chiefly Persian; both spellings are found in India, but [illegible] is the more frequent; [illegible] is only sporadic. The distinction between [illegible] and [illegible] is probably only external. In the one case the [illegible] is actually written, in the other case it is implied in the [illegible].

The constant fluctuation between [illegible] and [illegible][2] gives rise to a great deal of difficulty. In general the tendency of the manuscripts is to supplant the long vowel by the short.[3] The shortening, however, has extended itself quite differently in different classes of manuscripts. The old Copenhagen Pahlavi-Vispered goes to the extreme in this respect, writing the short vowel almost exclusively. In this Ms. the long [illegible] and [illegible] occur not more than three or four times in all. Second in this matter comes Âsadîn (in F1) who interchanges the long and the short of these two vowels at pleasure. At Yt. 13,79 [illegible] is written and is repeated again as catchword, but now [illegible] is written. In the two Pahlavî-Vendidâds of Mitrô-âpân the tendency to use short vowels is more prominent than in the two Pahlavi-Yasnas of the same copyist. The old Hôshâng codex of the Yasna must have been very conservative also in this respect. The opposite phenomenon, a certain fondness for [illegible] instead of [illegible] and [illegible], appears in all Persian manuscripts. One might at first glance be inclined to think that the many longs are a mere hobby of the Persian new redaction and to look upon them with mistrust. But more thorough examination renders it probable that we have here to do with an old transmission, even if the manuscripts sometimes have gone too far in employing the long. In general, however, the lengthening is confined within certain limits.

[1] e. g. Vd. 8,99.

[1] Y. 8,7; Vd. 7,50; 19,26.—It was often that I first came upon the right form in the course of the work. Thus at first I wrote [illegible] instead of the more correct [illegible]—Also [illegible] should have been written everywhere instead of [illegible].

[2] In the Persian Mss., as is well known, the two long vowels are not distinguished, it is only in Mf2 that traces of a distinction are still to be found. On the other hand, the Iranian Hôshâng codex of the fifteenth century must have had two distinct signs, otherwise Pt4 would not have kept the two so strictly apart.

[3] e. g. [illegible] (so also Mf4)—[illegible] Y. 13,3; furthermore Y. 35,3 n. 1; 57,8 n. 4; Vd. 19,12 n. 6.—The converse may be observed to a limited extent in the Indian Vendidâd sâdas, e. g. in certain nominatives like [illegible] (Vd. 15,10), [illegible] (Vd. 10,18).

The Persian Mss. quite correctly distinguish the acc. pl. in [1] [illegible] from the nom. sg. in [2] [illegible], [illegible]. They write [illegible], [illegible], whereas the Indian Vendîdâd sâdas lengthen the final. In Vd. 17,2 only the Persian Mss. write [illegible], the others [illegible]; in Y. 10,15 [illegible] is the reading best attested. The same is true of [illegible] Vd. 15,9 compared with Y. 9,23, and of [illegible] Vd. 5,13 compared with Vd. 19,12.

I have therefore everywhere called in the aid of the Persian manuscripts for regulating the writing of vowels. Where Persian manuscripts are wanting, as in the great Yashts, it is indeed hard to strike the happy medium between emendation and following the text as transmitted. Common words I have restored for the most part to their ordinary spelling; in the case of forms in [illegible], [illegible] I have kept more closely to the text as transmitted.

There is a great deal of fluctuation in the employment of the signs for the n and the sh sounds. With reference to these signs I was obliged as a matter of course to place myself in a position independent of the changing habits of scribes, and to adopt a fixed principle. I have adhered chiefly to the oldest copyist Mitrô-âpân where I could discover such a principle in him; otherwise I have taken the older Persian manuscripts as a pattern.

Only the latter consistently distinguish between [illegible] and [illegible]; [illegible] stands before most consonants. The law which I some time ago[3] established with regard to the usage of [illegible] and [illegible] is observed almost without exception in all the four Mss. of Mitrô-âpân.[4] The real sign for sh is [illegible] with him; [illegible] is its representative when final and also in ligature. [illegible] without ligature, and [illegible] with ligature, may interchange at pleasure. In Vd. 13,44-48 K1 has [illegible] (ligature) nine times, [illegible] four times; L4 [illegible] (ligature) twelve times, [illegible] once. Vd. 13,10 L4 has [illegible], K1 [illegible] with ligature; 19,4 L4 [illegible], K1 has for this [illegible]. At the end of a word [1] [illegible] is used so exclusively as ligature that I subsequently decided in favor of introducing this ligature for the Vendîdâd.— In all the later period, however, [illegible] is the principal sign and [illegible] the more rare character.

On the other hand, in the choice of [illegible] I have kept more to the Persian manuscripts. [illegible] is sh before [illegible], yet not in all cases, but is confined to a number of words; in these, however, it is consistently carried through only by the Persian manuscripts. All manuscripts write [illegible]; Mitrô-âpân sometimes writes [illegible], sometimes [illegible], [illegible] or [illegible], [illegible] or [illegible]; the Persian Mss. in all these words have [illegible] with trifling exceptions. In [illegible] Mitrô-âpân very rarely writes [illegible] (e. g. L4 has [illegible] in Vd. 15,8), the Persian always [illegible]. As to details the notes, especially of the Yasna, give sufficient information with regard to [illegible].[2]

The scribes frequently make use of longer or shorter ligatures after the manner of the Pahlavî script. As these are not obligatory, however, they could all be resolved in printing. I have made an exception solely in the case of [illegible] = [illegible], because this ligature belongs to one of the fixed habits of the scribes.[3] Of the other ligatures, the only one that came seriously into consideration was that for [illegible]. The fact that whole classes of manuscripts, especially the Persian,[4] make almost no use of this character, was decisive for me.

In the division of chapters and paragraphs I have adhered practically to my predecessor Westergaard, in order not to add to the confusion that already exists. In the Vendîdâd alone the separate chapters are numbered consecutively by the Mss. and carefully divided. In the Yasna and Vispered the numeration is wanting.[5]

---

[1] Exceptions are found of course, e. g. [illegible] Vd. 16,8.

[2] Except such cases as [illegible], where the length is required on account of [illegible]

[3] Drei Yasht, p. xii.

[4] Bartholomae's discovery that [illegible] is especially employed in the Persian Mss. where an older rt comes into play, is substantiated by other Persian manuscripts. But the Mss. are not consistent. It is a precarious matter to base a spelling upon etymology which is often doubtful; Mf1, Mf2 have [illegible] in the following words: [illegible] (and cognates), [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], but also [illegible] in all, except [illegible]. On the other hand, [illegible] is not employed as would be expected in [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], [illegible].

[1] For the most part also [illegible].

[2] With Mitrô-âpân I employ [illegible] also as ligature for [illegible] in words like [illegible]; a confusion of both signs is not possible.

[3] Within the word at Y. 40,4 I have preferred [illegible] of the Mss. to a [illegible] which seemed to me barbarous.

[4] Only for the notes the following have been newly cut: [illegible] = [illegible] (used exclusively in Persia; employed promiscuously with [illegible] in India), [illegible] = [illegible], [illegible] = [illegible] (both these predominating likewise in Persian Mss.; the cutting of [illegible] miscarried), [illegible] = [illegible] (especially in J3, S1).

[5] Only P14 numbers the Vispered chapters, the last number is 26.

The number 72, however, is traditional for the Yasna. The Yasna Mss. sometimes do not agree in regard to the close of chapters, or do not mark the end distinctly. It is to be observed that the introduction to a new chapter is frequently drawn over into the close of the preceding chapter. In my edition the Vispered has one more chapter than in Westergaard. I have divided Westergaard's Karde 23 into two, in accordance with the Vendîdâd sâda. The division of the great Yashts into Kardes is carefully carried out in the good manuscripts. The division into paragraphs is based everywhere upon Westergaard.

Punctuation is a weak point in the manuscripts. They have various signs of punctuation, indeed, but they have no system of punctuation. I had to devise a system for myself, based upon the signs that are found: thus, · is a colon, ∴ semicolon or period, ⁖ denotes the close of a paragraph or the end of a sentence, ⁂ a greater division, ⁂ ⁂ the end of a chapter. In texts with Pahlavî and Sanskrit translation, this version takes the place of punctuation The text is cut up by the translation into sentences of varied length, sometimes of only one or two words. For the most part, however, the explanation is inserted at an actual break in the sentence. It is only in the rarest instances that the manuscripts vary in this traditional division of the sentence.[1] In the sâda-texts, on the contrary, the text runs along without break until the first large division, with a mark of punctuation thrown in only here and there.[2] A general exception is made in the Gâthâs, where the close of the strophe is regularly denoted by the star. Where the translation was wanting I was therefore often thrown upon my own resources as regards punctuation. In that case the punctuation may be regarded in doubtful instances simply as subjective. In the Vendidâd I have adhered almost absolutely to the division of sentences by the Pahlavî translation, and have indicated the same either by a larger point (.), or by ∴ where the sentence ends. I regret that I did not do this consistently also in the Yasna; although even there the larger point for the most part denotes a division by the translation.[3] Sometimes, however, I have departed from the traditional division and have introduced a mark of punctuation on my own authority.[1] These cases can easily be controlled, as I assume that the Pahlavî translation is always used by the side of the Avestâ text. It is only the colon that I have everywhere supplied.

The variant readings have been selected in such a manner as to allow a judgment to be formed regarding the most important manuscripts, so far as that is possible without personal examination. In cases where the text is quite uncertain, the attempt has been made to give as complete a picture of the transmission as possible. Differences between [illegible] and [illegible], [illegible] and [illegible], [illegible] and [illegible], [illegible] and [illegible], however, have been generally ignored in these. In the notes, therefore, when a divergent reading is cited and is quoted from several manuscripts, it answers with absolute exactness only to the first manuscript; in the manuscripts that follow, one or other of the abovementioned minor differences may exist. Greater differences are specially noted of course.

The metre which is plainly transparent in many texts, I have brought out clearly to the eye in print, although the diaskeuasts had no longer any idea of this metre.[2] These verses, however, are not perfect, whether this be due to the mediocre character of the metrical skill of the composers, or to the fact that the texts have passed through a re-editing. The sign † is placed before such imperfect verses. The symbol * is used to mark words that are suspicious. For the reasons above discussed, however, I have grown more and more cautious and sparing in the use of these signs as the work went on. The symbol ° is employed for a sign of abbreviation and repetition, exactly as it is in the manuscripts. In the notes, much more extensive use has been made of ° for the sake of economizing space.

The short liturgical remarks that intervene in the text, I have given in Pâzand; I have retained only the Pahlavî word [illegible] (vad "as far as") which is almost universally employed in the abbreviation of repetitions.

Compounds, which are written as separate words in the manuscripts, have been drawn together in printing, for the sake of easier comprehension; but the point marking the division of the words has in all such cases been retained. In this also, a mistake may here and there have been made. The endeavour to furnish everywhere an intelligible text has conducted to more than one error from over-haste.

[1] Examples are found in Y. 20 and 21.

[2] More frequent in the Persian Vd. sâdas as an after-effect of the P.V.

[3] The heavy point which was introduced by Westergaard has not, however, turned out successfully, as in the proof sheets it sometimes could not be distinguished from the fine point used in dividing words.

[1] Thus in 26,1 ∴ is certainly erroneous.

[2] With exception of the Gâthâs.

Enclitics and proclitics, likewise, which in the manuscripts are sometimes attached to the adjacent word, sometimes written apart from it, have been printed in the present edition in closer union with such words.

Finally, the imposing list of names of men and institutions to whose liberal advances and efficient support I owe so many thanks, may fitly be opened by the names of the magnanimous Dasturs in Bombay. Dastur Jamaspji Minocheherji Jamasp Asana was the first to open freely to me the treasures of his manuscripts. He not only contributed the most largely from those in his own possession, but he also induced many of his fellow-countrymen to do the same. It was especially due to his incessant urging that the important manuscripts F1, Jp1, S1 were intrusted to me by their owners. In the second place I have the pleasure of mentioning Dastur Peshotanji Behramji Sanjana. His four manuscripts accompanied the work from the beginning to the end. Among Dastur Hoshangji Jamaspji's manuscripts, I should have been especially unwilling to miss the old Yasna.

The Mulla Firuz Library in Bombay did not place all their manuscripts at my disposal but their secretary, Khurshedji Rustamji Cama Esqr., very obligingly sought out the most important among them for my use. Of the European Libraries, the India Office in London and the University Library in Copenhagen stand in Avesticis at the head. R. Rost, that ever ready promotor of Oriental science, placed the entire manuscript material at my disposal from the first preliminary work on the edition almost to the completion of the printing. Only those who have had experience in such matters and know how important the personal examination of the manuscripts is while the printing is going on, will be able to appreciate the true value of this liberality. The Chief Librarian at Copenhagen, S. Birket Smith Esqr., generously sent to me to use at the library in Tübingen, Halle and in Berlin, all transportable manuscripts. He extended to me the privilege of collating the others and accommodated me in every possible way during my stay in Copenhagen. The same praise, for like kindnesses, is due to the Administration of the Royal Library in Munich. Also the Bodleian Library, in spite of inconvenience at the time, arranged to send its three manuscripts to Tübingen. For the exception made in my favour I have to thank the request of the Curator, F. Max Müller, made in my behalf. The University Library of Bombay sent three manuscripts upon the spontaneous application of G. Bühler. The Cambridge codex was loaned to me after the late Professor William Wright in most generous manner had stood surety for me.

I desire to express my respectful thanks to the German Foreign Office which, upon intercession from high authority, arranged for the transportation of the manuscripts, and provided the Imperial Consul in Bombay with special instructions to this end. In like manner I desire to thank the Ministry of Public Instruction in Prussia and in Wurtemberg, which allowed the manuscripts to be deposited and used in the libraries under their charge.

This edition, indeed, would not have been possible if the Secretary of State for India in Council had not assumed the patronage of it and had not likewise given material support in the form of a very considerable subscription. I beg leave to express my profound obligation for such assistance, and once more to repeat my thanks to Reinhold Rost through whose kind help such arrangements were brought about.

Dastur Peshotanji and especially Dastur Jamaspji have taken great trouble about the circulation of the lists of subscribers and have thereby greatly obliged the publisher.

Whereas to me has fallen the modest rôle of a compiler and corrector, the honour of being the real creator of the work belongs to the enterprising and self-sacrificing publisher, Kommerzienrat W. Kohlhammer. Without imposing conditions, he undertook the great risk of the publication and left to the editor a free hand in every respect. To me he seemed at all times the ideal of a publisher. That his eyes have closed for ever, before the completion of the work, is to me a profound source of grief. The splendid get-up of the work alone, is a lasting monument to him and to his house. That excellent compositor, Herr A. Sæuberlich, who already enjoys a great reputation in scholarly circles for his work, may look with pride upon this model performance. His work was done not only faultlessly and with the finest understanding, but he showed himself also a master in the artistic rounding off of what was often a stubborn piece of composition.

Among the friends who have stood helpfully by me in the work, E. W. West has contributed by far the most. It was thanks almost entirely to the great esteem and confidence which he enjoys among the Parsis and to his successful intercession, that the Dasturs allowed their precious manuscripts for the first time to go out of their hands and to be sent to me who was unknown to them. During the entire work West has exerted himself untiringly in my behalf, advising, instructing, and correcting, especially in all Pahlavî questions, in deciphering the Pahlavî colophons, and in the dating of the manuscripts. To him I feel under the deepest obligations.

One word more in closing. In the list I wish also to include two younger names, friends and former pupils. E. V. Arnold gave his kind help in connection with the English version of the foot-notes in the edition, and A. V. W. Jackson has assisted me in the translation of the Prolegomena. To both, my sincere thanks are due.

Preface.

A complete introduction, containing a comprehensive review of the Manuscripts employed, and an examination of the documentary tradition, as well as an account of the Orthography and the principles of textual criticism, will appear with the last part. The following observations may facilitate the use of the first parts.

Of the extant Zend types the preference has been given to the Copenhagen type, as being more suitable for printing than the Vienna type, while the letters resemble those of the oldest Manuscripts most nearly in form and size. As compared with Westergaard's edition, the alphabet is increased by a few symbols; in scope it corresponds precisely to the alphabet of the four oldest and best Manuscripts J2, K1,5, L4. The following new symbols are added:

𐬣, which before 𐬫 (y) denotes a modification of 𐬢 (ṅ), but where it does not stand before 𐬫, as in [illegible], denotes a combination of 𐬢 (ṅ) and 𐬵, and is consequently equivalent to ṅh.

𐬒 a modification of 𐬵 (h) before 𐬫 (y), is in the good Manuscripts strictly distinguished from 𐬓 (hv).

The and [illegible] (ahe) have been added for reasons to be discussed later.

The symbols [illegible] the engraving of which is new, are employed in the notes only, and with special reference to the Persian Manuscripts.

Westergaard has created for himself a peculiar system of punctuation, since that of the Manuscripts, especially those without translation, is altogether insufficient. I have extended his system, adding several new marks the form of which are borrowed from the Manuscripts. Thus ∵ represents our colon and semicolon, ∴ our full-stop, ❦ a larger break, ❦ ❦ the end of a chapter. I have retained Westergaard's larger stop as the smallest punctuation. In many places I have employed the larger stop for the sole reason that the Manuscripts with translation make a break at that point. It was impossible to follow slavishly the punctuation of the Manuscripts, which indeed do not agree among themselves, since they often split up matter which is closely connected. Where however the division into clauses in the Pahlavi and Sanskrit translation has any bearing on the interpretation, I have called attention to it in the notes. Lacunae in the Manuscripts are indicated by …… in the notes.

As in the Mss., ° has been used only as a symbol of abbreviation and repetition. If no mark of word-division (,) stands before °, a single word only is abbreviated, otherwise a sentence, or a whole formula. In the notes ° is used much more extensively for economy of space.

Preface.

* and † are critical signs. * marks such words as are to be found in all the Manuscripts, but are rendered suspicious by the context or their omission in the translation. Several such words are enclosed within * *. † marks incorrect or suspicious verses.

Compound-words which are written separate in the Manuscripts are distinguished by being run together in print, while the mark of division is retained. This plan has also been adopted with enclitics and proclitics, which are written in many Mss. in conjunction with the preceding or following words respectively. If the first member of a compound happens to stand at the end of a line, a - is inserted.

I have followed the precedent of the later Manuscripts in transcribing into Pâzend the most important liturgical directions, which are given in the best Manuscripts in Pahlavi. They are. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] for 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. [illegible] "and", [illegible] "times", [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] "day", [illegible] "month". The Pahlavi word only [illegible] (vad) "as far as", which is used to save repetition, has been retained.

In the division into chapters and paragraphs I have followed Westergaard, with the exception of a few quite insignificant alterations.

It is mainly due to the great assistance which has been generously afforded me on the part of the Parsis, and especially by the Dasturs Jamaspji Minocheherji, M. A., Ph. D., Peshotanji Behramji, Hoshangji Jamaspji, and the Management of the Mulla Firuz Library in Bombay, that my endeavours to bring together the Manuscript material in the greatest possible completeness have been crowned with success

The Manuscripts, which I have employed for the Yasna, are in alphabetical order as follows:

B(ombay in the University Library):

B2: Vendidâd sâda, rather old, the concluding pages are wanting.

B3: Yasna sâda; a careless copy of K5, about

Bb (Burjorji Bomanji, Mobed):

Bb1: Vendidâd sâda, old, one of the best Mss. of this class.

C(ambridge):

C1: Yasna sâda in the Library of Emmanuel College, extends to Y. 50,3; closely related to K11.

E(rachji Darabji Rustamji Sanjana, Dastur):

E1: Khorda Avestâ, contains the entire Yashts, a good Ms.

E2: Khorda Avestâ, of modern date.

F(ramji Fardunji Madun):

F1: Khorda Avesta, containing the entire Yashts.

F2. Khorda Avestâ, from Persia, good.

H(oshangji Jamaspji, Dastur in Poona):

H1: Yasna sâda bâ Kiriya, no date, about 400 years old, the best Ms. of this class.

J(amaspji Minocheherji Jamasp Asana, M. A., Ph. D., Dastur in Bombay):

J1: Vendidâd sâda, 158 years old.

J2. Yasna with Pahlavi translation, written by Mihirâpân Kai-Khûsrô, finished on the 19th day of the 11th month A. Y. 692 (A. D. 1323). Next to K5 the most valuable Ms. of the Yasna, closely akin to K5; both however can scarcely be descended immediately from the same original.

J3: Yasna with Neriosengh's Sanskrit translation, a costly Manuscript, considered by Dastur Jamaspji to be 600 years old. It is unfortunately seriously damaged. K6. P11. J4 are immediately or mediately descended from J3.

J4: Yasna with Sanskrit translation; cf. J3.

J5: Yasna sâda, old, extends to Y. 35.

J6: Yasna sâda, about 400 years old, very ornamental writing.

J7: Yasna bâ Kiriyâ, about 150 years old, good, closely akin to H1.

J8: Vîspered Gahanbâr, more than 200 years old.

J9: Khorda Avestâ, a costly Manuscript with a peculiar typography; in the opinion of Dastur Jamaspji 500 years old.

J11: Vîshtâsp sâda, a careful copy of K4. This Manuscript has been of great service to me when my collation of K4 failed me.

K(openhagen in the University Library):

K4: Vîshtâsp sâda, written in Kirmân A. D. 1723; an important Manuscript.

K5: Yasna with Pahlavi translation, A. D. 1323, a well-known old Manuscript.

K6: Yasna with Sanskrit translation, copy of J3.

K7: Vîspered with Pahlavi translation and Vîspered Gahanbâr (K7b).

K8: Vîspered Gahanbâr, copied from K4.

K9: Vendîdâd sâda, copy of Mf2.

K10: Vendîdâd sâda; the date not filled in.

K11. Yasna sâda with Vîspered and Sîrôza; A. D. 1617, closely akin to C1.

K15: contains among other things several fragments of the Yasna.

K20. old Manuscript, contains a longer fragment of the Yasna.

K36: Khorda Avestâ from Persia, A. D. 1704. In Westergaard's edition M1.

K37: formerly M2, from Persia, contains considerable fragments of the Yasna.

K38: Khorda Avestâ, contains considerable pieces of the Yasna, especially in the Darûn Yasht.

K43: a Pahlavî Manuscript, contains a fragment of the Yasna from Persia.

L(ondon in the India Office Library).

L1: Vendîdâd sâda, without date.

L2: Vendîdâd sâda, Samvat 1816 (A. D. 1759).

L3: Vendîdâd sâda, without date.

L5: Vendîdâd sâda, very incorrect, Samvat 1848 (A. D. 1791).

L6: Yasna sâda, very carelessly written, full of Persian glosses; A. D. 1741.

L13: Yasna sâda, beginning and end lost, a good Manuscript of medium date.

L17: Yasna sâda, a careless copy of K5; A. D. 1550.

L20: Yasna bâ Kiriyâ, of modern date.

L27: Vîspered Gahanbâr.

Lb (London in the British Museum):

Lb2: Yasna sâda; A. D 1661. My thanks are due to Mr. E. V. Arnold, of Cambridge, for the collation of this Manuscript.

M(unich in the "Hof- und Staatsbibliothek", Haug's collection; the original numbering is retained):

M1: Yasna with Pahlavi translation; A. D. 1733

M2: Vendîdâd sâda; A. D. 1656.

M4: contains the Srosh Yasht (Y. 57).

M6a: contains several strophes of the Gâthâs.

M7: as M6a.

M25: contains the Haptanghâiti.

M26: contains several fragments of the Yasna.

M35: ditto.

Mf (Mulla Firuz Library in Bombay):

Mf1: Yasna sâda, written in Persia A. Y. 1090 (A. D. 1721); one of the best Manuscripts of the Yasna.

Mf2. Vendîdâd sâda, written in Yazd A. Y. 987 (A. D. 1618); by Westergaard denoted by R. A very good Manuscript. K9 is a copy of it.

Mf3. contains several pieces from the Yasna, especially in the Darûn Yasht.

O(xford in the Bodleian).

O1 Yasna sâda, A. Y. 1105 (A. D. 1736), is descended from the same original as L13.

O2: Vendîdâd sâda; A. D. 1681.

O3. Khorda Avestâ; A. D. 1646.

P(aris in the "Bibliothèque nationale").

P1. Vendîdâd sâda, A. D. 1714; known through Burnouf's facsimile.

P6: Yasna sâda, without date, carelessly written especially in the first half, strongly influenced by K5, critically of no special value Olshausen's collation.

P11 (Nr. 2 du fonds). Yasna with Sanskrit translation; copy of J3. The Ms. was accessible to me in a copy of Olshausen only.

Pd: a Manuscript in the public Library at St. Petersburg in the Dolgorukic collection of Oriental Manuscripts; contains among other things Y. 28 to 34. After the collation published by C. Salemann.

Preface.

Pt (Peshotanji Behramji Sanjana, Dastur in Bombay):

Pt4: Yasna with Pahlavî translation, undated, not very old, but one of the most careful and best Manuscripts of the Yasna and entirely independent of J2. K5.

S (Mss. from Surat, the owner of which has not yet been communicated to me):

S1: Yasna with Sanskrit translation, extends to Chap. 46 only, the end is wanting. An old and most valuable Manuscript. It could not be used till Chap. 10 on. I shall communicate the variants of the first chapters in an appendix.

S2: Vendîdâd sâda; 122 years old.

W(ilson's Mss., according to Westergaard):

W1: Khorda Avestâ, written in Persia.
W3: modern copy.

Tubingen, 1th December 1884.

With the exception of the recurrent formulas, here [illegible] [illegible], there [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible], Chapter 6 is almost entirely identical with Chapter 2. The sections 6,1—16 and 2,2—17; 6,19—20 and 2,17—18 correspond. Only the first word [illegible] is missing in Y. 2,2. Section 17 and 18 of this chapter recal Y. 3,20 and 21; 7,20 and 21. With the exception of the first word 6,1—10, the second half of 11—16, and 20 are repeated in Y. 17,1—10, 12—17 and 19; cf. also Chap. 59.

12.

According to Y. 13,8 the chapter is called [illegible]. It falls into two parts: the [illegible] proper (1–7) and the [illegible] (cf. Y. 13,8), which extends from 12,8 to 13,8. In the later ritual-books the section 11,17 to 12,7 is named after the initial word [illegible], the section 12,8 to the end of 13 is called [illegible], cf. Sl. 13,1.

In this section the following additional Manuscripts have been used:

Dh(anjibhai Framji Patet in Bombay):

Dh1: Vendidâd sâda. A. Y. 1134 (A. D. 1765)..

J15: Khorda Avestâ and Vispered. The Avestâ texts with Pahlavi translation complete. Ms.

J16: Khorda Avestâ.

Jm (Jamshedji Mânekji Unwalla, Mobed):

Jm1: Yasna sâda.
Jm2: Vendidâd sâda.
Jm3: Vendidâd sâda.
Jm4: Khorda Avestâ. A. Y. 721 (A. D. 1352). Occasionally referred to as R1 in consequence of a misunderstanding.

Jp (Jamshedji Peshotanji Sanjana, Dastur in Balsar):

Jp1: Vendidâd sâda from Persia: very valuable manuscript. Copied by Fredun Marzapân (cf. West, Bundahish XXXIII) A. Y. 987 (A. D. 1618) and revised by Dastur Rustam Gushtasp (the copyist of Mf1 and F2). Although written in the same year as Mf2, it is not derived from the same original; it is more closely related with K4 than with Mf2, and was probably written in Kirman, like K4; on the other hand Mf2 comes from Yazd. 2

Mb (Mancherji Barzoji Powri, Mobed*):

Mb1: Khorda Avestâ.

Ml (Manekji Limji Hataria in Teheran): 3

Ml1: Vendidâd sâda.

For all these Manuscripts I am indebted to the untiring exertions of my friend, the Dastur Jamaspji Minocheherji Jamasp Asana, M. A., Ph. D., who has supported me from the first in this undertaking with his aid and good wishes

Nearly the whole of Chap. 24 recurs in other chapters of the Yasna. With the exception of the formulas Parr. 1 (from [illegible]) to 3 inclusive agree with Y. 22,1 (from [illegible]) to 3 inclusive. The first half of Parr. 1 and 5 occurs here only in the Yasna; the recurring formula is the same as in Y. 4. All the rest occurs word for word in other chapters of the Yasna: 24,4 4,2; the second half of 24,3 26,6 (second half); 24,6 8 24,1—3; 9—27 4,4 22; 28 32 22,23—27; 33 and 34 4,24 and 25. Chap. 24 is found in an enlarged shape in Vp. 11, and is therefore omitted in the Vds. and the Vîshtâsp sâda (K4).

J2. K5. Pt4 do not make a new chapter begin here; J5.6.7. H1. C1. L13.20 join the first words, as far as [illegible] [illegible], to Chap. 25. K4 omits the first words entirely, and begins with [illegible], and so too the Litany which is given in K37. In J3 the chapter, as far as Par. 11, was originally abbreviated, as in S1; but in this Ms. Parr. 1—10, with their translation, have been supplied by a later hand. In the Vds. manuscripts, with the exception of L3, the whole chapter is missing. Parr. 1—10 recur Y. 59,18—27.

13 1) The two prayers [illegible] and [illegible] are here given completely by J2. K5. Pt4 only. They are seldom written in full, e. g. in J2 K5. Pt4 only here and Introd. 15 and 6; they also appear in the Introd of some Khorda Avestâs, as F1.2. E1, in J9 in the Karshêd Nyâish, in K7b fol. 54a. Of these two prayers with the [illegible] in Par. 15 the Introd. to the Gâthâs consists, cf. Vp. 13,1.2. The other Mss. have in the place of Parr. 13 15 the triple antiphonal formula of Introd. 13, and Y. 3,25. — 2) F2; [illegible] J2.9. K5. Pt4. — 3) J2; [illegible] K5, [illegible] F2. Yasna Haptanghâiti.

The Yasna Haptanghâiti proper extends from Y. 35,3 to the end of 41; 35,1 and 2 are added as preface, Chap. 42 as conclusion. Pt4 has the Pahlavi heading Yashto î Haft-hâto, and has a special numbering for the single Hâs. The Mss. of the Yasna sâda and Vendîdâd sâda divide the chapters into periods, marking the conclusion of each by ꞉꞉ or ჻ These divisions almost always coincide with the paragraphs given in the text. Although the greater part of the H. is prose, the tradition finds strophes and verses in the periods and clauses, cf M6a fol. 138 seqq. In Pt4 the number of strophes (vêcast) and lines (gâs) in each chapter is given in Pahlavi at its end. The division of the sentences in the S.V. often differs from that in the P.V.

Br (Behmanji Rustamji Mula Firoz, Dastur in Bombay):

Br1: Vendidâd sâda, Samvat 1805 (A. D. 1748).

Br2: Yasna sâda, written in the Iranian style, without date.

Fl(orence):

Fl1: Vispered sâda (containing Yasna and Vispered), written in the Iranian style, modern, but very correct; given by Dastur Khorshedji Bejanji[*] to the Indian Museum in Florence.

H2: Khorda Avestâ, old, closely akin to J9.

Lb16: Khorda Avestâ, from Persia. Sir Henry Rawlinson's Ms. My thanks are due to Mr. A. Stein for the collation of this Ms.

Pt1: contains the entire Yashts, A. D. 1625, valuable Ms.

Pt3: contains Yasna and Vispered Gahanbâr.

For the first-mentioned Mss. I am indebted to the untiring exertions of my friend, the Dastur Jamaspji Minocheherji, M. A., Ph. D.

---

[*] Another Vispered sâda of the Dastur Khorshedji Bejanji did not arrive in time to be used for the Yasna.

Tübingen, March 1886.
