Vorderseite. Hol. I.

Handwritten text in a cursive script, organized into horizontal lines. The text is written on a page that shows signs of wear, including a large diagonal tear across the middle and some smaller holes or damage. The script is dense and appears to be a form of shorthand or a specific dialect. The text is organized into several horizontal sections, with some lines being more prominent than others. The overall layout is somewhat irregular due to the physical damage to the document.

Handwritten text in Coptic script, arranged in columns. The text is written in a dark ink on a light background. The script is a mix of upper and lower case letters, with some diacritics. The text is organized into several lines, with some lines starting with a small symbol that looks like a cross or a star. The text is written in a cursive style, with some letters being connected to the next one. The text is written in a way that is easy to read, but it is still a bit difficult to decipher for someone who is not familiar with the script. Handwritten text in a cuneiform script, arranged in vertical columns. The text is written on a piece of paper that has been torn and folded, with the right side missing. The script is a form of cuneiform, likely from the Hittite or Assyrian periods. The columns are numbered on the left side, from 24 to 42. The text is written in a dark ink on a light-colored background. There are some corrections and additions indicated by small circles and lines. The text is a transcription of a cuneiform tablet, with some parts being corrected or added.
